Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, December 18; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, December 11; Calcutta, December 10.

MADRAS had just heard of the Prince of Wales's arrival at Tuticorin, and was all a-tiptoe for his appearance in the Southern Capital. The disappointment caused by previous changes in the Prince's programme, and the countermanding of the shooting trip in the Anamalays, was giving place to the excitement of preparation for his actual advent. With regard to the Bengal and Upper Indian tour it was understood that his Royal Highness was to arrive in Bankipur on the 4th January, when the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal will present to him a number of English and Native gentlemen who distinguished themselves in the famine. Leaving for Benares on the same evening, he will be met by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces. He will go up the river in a boat past the ghâts and the city, which will be brilliantly illuminated, to sleep in the Lieutenant-Governor's Camp. He will hold a levee next day, interchange visits with the Maharaja, and lay the foundation-stone of the Hospital. On the 6th he goes to Lucknow, and will probably remain there till the 10th. He stops at Cawnpore on the way to Delhi, where he may arrive on the 11th, and remain till the 17th. He goes to Lahor on the 18th, and Jammu on the 20th, and will take Agra on the 25th on his way back.

AT Agra a large number of native chiefs will be collected, and a considerable part of the first two days will be taken up with ceremonial visits. It is probable that on Wednesday, the 26th, a fete will be given to H.R.H. in the Palace by the Lieutenant-Governor, Sir John Strachey. On the evening of Thursday, the 27th, there will probably be an illumination of the Taj; and on the following night a ball, given by the civil and military residents of the N.W.P. On the 29th the Prince will probably visit Fatehpur Sikri. On Monday, the 31st, he will go to Gwalior, to visit the Maharajah Sindia, returning to Agra on February 2, and leaving it a day or two later for Jaipur. He will not visit Ajmir. On the morning of the 7th he will be due at Moradabad, whence he will drive to his Camp in the Terai. The next three weeks will be devoted to tiger-shooting with General Ramsay and Sir Jung Bahadur in Kumaon and Nepal. H.R.H. may probably arrive at Allahabad on March 4. It is expected that he will only remain there during the day, and start the same evening for Indor and Bombay.

AT the meeting of the Viceregal Council on Tuesday, Dec. 7, Mr. Hobhouse introduced his special Reliefs Bill for the performance of specific contracts, which was referred to a Select Committee, and Sir William Muir obtained leave to introduce a Bill for constituting and regulating the Banks of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay.

ON Monday, December 6, Lord Northbrook opened the Mayo Hospital at Jaipur, and unveiled the statue erected there to Lord Mayo, of whom he spoke in terms of the highest appreciation. On the 9th his Lordship reached Calcutta after a tour which has taken him through every noteworthy place in Rajputana and Central India. Three days earlier the Burmese Embassy sent by the King of Burmah to meet the Prince of Wales arrived at Calcutta, where it will remain till February or March next.

ON Wednesday, December 8, the Memorial Church at Cawnpore was consecrated by the Bishop of Calcutta, in the presence of many hundred visitors from near and far. In his sermon Dr. Milman made impressive allusion to the sad story which "All Souls" Church has been built to commemorate. The church is built in the middle of the site of the entrenchment in which General Wheeler and his fellow-sufferers defied for three long weeks the fiercest onsets of the Nana and his army. Close to two of the four corners of the church stand the two great tombs containing the bones of those who first died or were killed during the siege; likewise of Colonel Vibart, with the officers and men who were brought back captive to the Nana after the ambuscade and massacre on the Ganges. A noble line of new barracks intervenes between the church and the Sivada House, where the Nana dwelt, and Vibart and his companions were murdered. About a mile to the north lies the fatal ghât; and about the same distance to the west, are the beautifully kept gardens round the Memorial Well.

MR. JULAND DANVERS had left Bombay to be present at the opening of a large section of the Southern India narrow gauge line, on the Prince's route from Tuticorin to Trichinopoly and Madras. After his return to Bombay Mr. Danvers intended to go over the Bombay and Baroda Railway.

SIR LOUIS MALLET proceeded to Calcutta on Wednesday, December 8, after having spent a week in Bombay. During his stay there he visited several cotton mills, went over the Port Trust Bunders, and looked at the Sassoon Dock. Accompanied by General Kennedy, he also went across the Harbour to see the Hydraulic Lift worked, and afterwards landed at Elephanta to explore the well-known caves.

WE hear that two Commissionerships in Burmah will shortly be vacant. Colonel D. Brown, of Maulmain, is retiring from the service, and Colonel Ryan, of Akyab, comes home on furlough. Colonel Horace Brown, who is now on furlough, will, it is rumoured in Calcutta, succeed his namesake at Maulmain. The Commissionership of Arracan is supposed to lie between Colonel Lloyd, Colonel E. B. Sladen, and Colonel A. G. Duff.

The successor to Colonel Hyde, Mint Master in Calcutta, who proceeds home on furlough and will not return, is to be Colonel Ballard, Mint Master at Bombay.

IN connection with the recent plot at Rangoon thirty-two more prisoners have been examined before the magistrate. Two of the prisoners have been pardoned on condition of their giving evidence against the others who are implicated.

ONE of the places lately visited by Lord Northbrook was the little Rajput State of Ratlam in Western Malwa, ruled by a descendant of Ratan Singh, of Jodhpur, who received it as a fief from the Moghul Emperor, Shah Jahan, in the middle of the seventeenth century. In after days the Rajahs of Ratlam paid tribute to the House of Sindia. The area of Ratlam hardly exceeds 900 square miles, peopled by about 100,000 souls, with a revenue of about three lakhs, or £30,000. On the death of Bairam Singh, in 1864, his infant son succeeded to a waning revenue, a growing debt, a corrupt ministry, and a discontented people. Thanks however to the fostering care of Mír Shahámat Ali, the Regent, the little State has not only recovered from its condition of bankruptcy and confusion, but has paid its debt, doubled its revenue, and seen its people become happy and prosperous in the last ten years. "With good roads, schools, hospitals, Ratlam (says the Pioneer) can bear favourable comparison with any State. The gardens and public buildings in the town would be a credit to any municipality, and the superintendent had reason to be proud of the opportunity of showing his Excellency the result of his ten years' stewardship." The honour of the Star of India was never perhaps more worthily bestowed than when in 1870 Mír Shahámat Ali, Superintendent of Ratlam, was enrolled as a Companion of the Order. The young chief, Ranjit Singh, now about fifteen years old, is described as "a really promising lad. With a handsome face and good figure, he possesses much of that nobility of manner and dignity which are the acknowledged, but seldom seen, characteristics of the Rajput. He rides well, and is fond of sport, is worshipped by his people, who hope all good things for and from him, and not without reason."

JOWRAH, which the Viceroy next visited, appears to be another of the show places of Central India, bearing on its face the fruits of good rule and prosperity. The young Chief, Nawab Mohammed Ismail Khan, succeeded his father in 1863; but being then but a child, the management of the State devolved upon his Minister and relative, Hazrat Nur Khan, who for more than ten years has faithfully fulfilled the trust reposed in him. The Nawab was last year placed in charge of his State; but he still employs as his minister and counsellor the man to whom he owes so much of his wealth and comfort. There is nothing remarkable—says the same informant—"about the town of Jowrah save that cleanliness and order which mark the care and trouble taken, not only with the town itself, but throughout the territory, which is in area about 900 square miles, with a population of 85,000, and yielding a revenue of upwards of eight lakhs. Clean, broad streets, with good drainage, a comfortable palace and neat gardens, are pleasant sights in a native town."

ANOTHER of the Malwa States visited by the Viceroy is Dhar, with a population of 150,000, covering an area of more than 1,000 square miles, and yielding a revenue of about £50,000. Its Rajah boasts an ancient Rajput descent, but owes his sovereignty to one of the Peshwas, in the middle of the last century. During the Mutiny, when its Rajah, Anand Rao Puar, was only a boy of 13, Dhar rose against the English, and General Stuart's column besieged the fort at the capital; but as the troops advanced to a breach made by their guns, they found the fort already abandoned. Sir H. Durand was for sequestering or annexing the State, on the ground of the Darbar's responsibility for the misconduct of their troops. But the Court of Directors—according to Sir John Kaye—declined so to punish a weak little State for inability to control its troops, when it was "patent to the whole world that the more powerful States of Gwalior and Indor, and even the British Government itself, were unable to control theirs." In 1862 Dhar was therefore restored to its young ruler, with the loss of a slice made over to Bhopal. Two years later, when the administration was handed over to the Rajah himself, he gave promises of good behaviour, but was obliged to leave the fort as it was, with the breach in the walls still open. This condition the Viceroy has now removed, in return for the Rajah's success in governing. His State, we are told, "is now prosperous and thriving. The chief has done much to improve the condition of his State and people. He is noted for warm-hearted liberality and charity, and has spent large sums on public works and worthy institutions, which will long make the name of Anand Rao Puar famous in the history of Dhar."

NOW that a Marine Survey Department has at length been formed in India to take up and carry on the work so ably pursued before 1861 by the old Indian Navy, it is to be hoped that the hands of so active a Superintendent as Captain A. D. Taylor will not be hampered by any needless restrictions. Complaints have reached us touching the obstructions offered in certain quarters to the formation and progress of the new Department; and it appears that of the survey vessels which ought to have been ready to leave Calcutta on the 1st November, one did not start till after the middle of that month, and the other started only in December; much precious time being thus lost in the working season of the year. It is also feared that Lord Northbrook still contemplates the possibility of placing the new service under the Military Marine Department, as represented by Captain Bythesea, whose latest services hitherto seem to have been confined to interference with other people's business. Captain Taylor, we hear, has very lately returned from an inspection of the chief ports in British Burmah. He found the charts so defective, that it is intended to begin the first season's survey at the mouth of the Rangoon river, where the relative positions of the two lighthouses are not known for certain within two miles. Had it been necessary to send transports thither of late, some of them would probably have come to grief. These defects however Captain Taylor may be trusted to remedy with the least possible delay.

AT the reception on Friday week the Maharajahs of Patiála, Indor, Gwalior, Jodhpur, Jaipur, Kashmir, Rewa, and the Begam of Bhopal were introduced to the Prince of Wales, each attended by a number of Sirdars. The grand hall of Government House was lined with troops. In spite of a previous announcement from Bombay, it appears that the Begam after all was closely veiled. The Times correspondent seems to have confounded her with her mother, the Sikandar Begam, who died in 1868, when he talks of her noble behaviour and her harangue to the troops during the great Mutiny. The Rajah of Patiála, son of him who so nobly upheld our cause at the same period, is described by the same informant as "a fine-looking man of twenty-two, with rather a heavy face of a Sikh character in its outline." Holkar looked "huge in stature and bulk, dressed simply, but decorated with diamonds and emeralds of great value. . . . He rolled slowly along, followed by his two sons, his brothers, and the Sirdars and Ministers." Jodhpur is "a most interesting person, slight build, with small handsome face, dressed in immense petticoats of many folds, reaching nearly to the ancle, gathered in by a circular roll of gold tissue from the waist. His head-dress was a small turban bound round his brow with a golden fillet blazing with jewels. He wore a necklace of jewels of extraordinary size. His Sirdars, similarly attired, were almost equally magnificent." Jaipur "was a very different style of man. He is very liberal and enlightened, losing somewhat in impressiveness of aspect by a large pair of spectacles which he wears; but he ranks high in the estimation of the Government and the natives." Kashmir and his Sirdars wore the Sikh head-dress and were ablaze with jewels. He had been with difficulty persuaded to cut down his gifts from £50,000 to £5,000 in value. He is making thirty miles of new road for the Prince, and declares he has no further wish in life now. His appearance and bearing "secured good will." Sindia's retinue was "very fine." It is said that "he can handle a division of the three arms better than most Generals, and is altogether a man of marked ability and courage." Rewa's turn-out "reflected credit on Mr. Bannermann, the political agent. He is a Rajput, and a Sanskrit scholar, but speaks English. He is also a great tiger hunter." His loyalty to the English during the Mutiny was not a little strengthened by the wise counsels and bold deeds of Captain now Colonel Willoughby Osborne.

ON the afternoon of December 27 the Prince of Wales opened the new Zoological Garden just formed under the auspices of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. Accompanied by the members of his suite, his Royal Highness then attended a garden-party given in his honour by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal at Belvedere. The fête was a brilliant and successful one. During the afternoon the Prince visited the General Hospital, and expressed great satisfaction with the arrangements for the care of the patients. The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal gave a State dinner to the Prince that evening. His Royal Highness afterwards attended a splendid ball given by the Viceroy at Government House, at which nearly 2,000 people were present. A meeting of influential natives has been held, at which it was resolved to commemorate the Prince of Wales's visit by founding an institution for instruction in practical science.

ON the 28th the Prince returned the visits of Holkar, and the Maharajahs of Kashmir, Johore, Jaipur, and Jodpur. He received some magnificent presents. At three o'clock there was a Levée at Government House. About 2,000 presentations were made, ending with native officers. A State dinner was given at Government House, after which the Prince of Wales, the Viceroy, and a large party attended a Native Entertainment, which was very successful. The gardens in which the fête was held were profusely decorated, and the scene was remarkably altogether brilliant. There were Nautch dances and other native performances, ending with a grand display of fireworks. His Royal Highness left the gardens at two o'clock the next morning.

ON the 29th the Prince of Wales returned the visits of Sindia and other native chiefs, and exchanged presents. He attended the races in the afternoon, and was afterwards present at a dinner at Government House. At midnight the members of his suite started on a sporting expedition, to remain till Friday, the 31st. The Prince did not go. No fresh cases of cholera had occurred on board the Serapis or in the fleet. The weather is reported splendid, and cold at night.

ON the 30th his Royal Highness lunched on board the Serapis. The Maharajahs of Travancore and Vizianagram had reached Calcutta.

ON the 31st December the Prince went out to witness the exercises of the Native Cavalry before breakfast, and afterwards visited all the Calcutta hospitals. After luncheon he attended a small garden party at Government House. He dined in the evening with Lord Northbrook, and at 10.30 went to the Calcutta Ball, which was a very brilliant affair. The boar hunters returned before dinner. Seven boars were killed, and Lord C. Beresford had some teeth injured slightly by a spear thrust. The Serapis is now quite healthy. The Prince entertained the Viceroy, Miss Baring, and a small party at luncheon on board the day before.

ON New Year's Day the Prince held a Chapter of the Star of India at nine o'clock. Two princes were dubbed Knights Grand Commanders of the Order, viz., the Maharajah of Jodhpur and the Rajah of Jhind. The Knights Commanders were Mr. William Robinson, the Maharajah of Pannah, the Rajah of Nahan, Rao Dada Sahib of Indor; Colonel the Hon. Henry Ramsay, General Ranodip Sing Bahadur, Commander-in-Chief of the Nepalese Army; Rao Rajah Ganpat, Dewan of Gwalior; and Nawab Faiz Ali, Prime Minister of Kotah. As Companions of the Order were invested Mr. Robert Barclay Chapman and Mr. James Richard Bullen Smith. An encampment was formed on the Maidan, and the Chapter was held in the Viceroy's darbar tent, with tents for each Knight Grand Commander, according to his degree. A procession was formed to the Viceroy's tent, which started under a Royal salute of artillery. Military bands played a grand march during the passage of the procession. The ceremony, which lasted two hours, was of a most imposing character. The gorgeous costumes of the native princes and chiefs and their attendants formed a splendid and brilliant pageant. There were upwards of 12,000 spectators, including the chief officials and leading natives. Fresh salutes were fired at the conclusion of the ceremony, after which the procession reformed in reverse order, the Prince of Wales being at the head. That afternoon, amidst a brilliant gathering of people, he unveiled the statue erected to Lord Mayo. The same night the Prince of Wales visited the English theatre, where Mr. Charles Mathews played a part.

IT is stated that the Russian occupation of Northern Khokan has brought on a series of troubles, which will shortly lead to the annexation of the southern half as well. Encouraged by patriots in the south, the Kipchaks of the northern territory, as well as the inhabitants of the Eastern Zarafshan Valley, have repeatedly attacked isolated garrisons, and sometimes very nearly succeeded in exterminating them. As late as November 6 a three days' battle had to be fought in the very streets of Namangan, the city having risen against the garrison, while the principal force under General Scobeleff, the Governor of the new district, was operating against the Kipchaks at twelve hours' distance from the capital. The insurgents numbered thousands, and as the Russians lost nearly fifty men in killed and wounded, the fighting, for a Turkistan campaign, must have been very serious. The encounter in the Zarafshan Valley occurred on December 10 at Ubduran, a place to reach which the Russian columns proceeding from Ura Tube had to pass hills 11,000 feet high.

BY official and other telegrams from Penang we learn that the Malays of three States in Malacca took up a strong position in a mountain pass in Sunji Ujong, and strongly fortified themselves. This position was attacked and taken on the 22nd of Dec. by 450 men, consisting of nearly 300 Gurkhas, with detachments of artillery, the 10th Regiment, blue-jackets, and irregulars. One hundred and seventy Gurkhas, blue-jackets, and Artillery started on the 19th under Colonel Hill and Commander Stirling, made a long, arduous flank march for three days through dense jungle, and turned the position; while the remainder under Colonel Clay, leaving on the 21st, advanced through the jungle in front. Only one Gurhka was killed and one wounded. Complete success with so little loss was greatly due to the gallantry and judgment of Captain Channer, of the Gurkhas, who surprised and took a stockade flanking the position. After visiting the invaded districts, the troops were to return to Sunji Ujong. Colonel Anson reports that Captain Channer crept up unseen behind a Malay in the jungle, and followed him into the stockade, where he shot him. Twenty-five Gurkhas rushed in after the Captain, and surprised the Malays, five of whom were killed, and the remainder fled. All the forces worked well and behaved most gallantly. The Govenor proceeds to Malacca, and no more resistance is expected. Perak is reported quieter; there is occasionally some shooting at the British forces from places of concealment, but the fighting is considered over. Our troops hold all the important positions, and Lela has fled into Siamese territory.

WE notice with regret the death of Mr. Edward Thornton, formerly of the India House, at the ripe age of seventy-seven. Mr. Thornton was for many years Assistant Secretary to the East India Board, under Mr. afterwards Sir James Melvill. For several years he also edited this journal with great ability. As an author he was widely known by his "History of the British Empire in India," a work of acknowledged usefulness, and by his Gazetteers of Sind and India, remarkable at the time he wrote them for their fulness and accuracy.

THE student of Indian History will have cause to thank Messrs. Allen and Co. for publishing a very valuable guide to the leading events in that history, in the shape of a "Chronological and Historical Chart of India," compiled and drawn by Mr. Arthur Durtnall, of the High Court of Justice. This carefully digested work shows in one view all the principal Nations, Governments and Empires, which have existed in India from the earliest known period to the suppression of the Great Mutiny in 1858. The tables at either side give the various dates according to the different eras current in India, and by running the eye along the coloured tables in the body of the chart one may see at a glance what happened each year in different parts of the country, as well as the course of contemporary events in other parts of the world. The amount of labour and care involved in such a work must have been very great, and the result on the whole is highly creditable to the compiler.

WITH reference to the notice which appeared in our issue of last week, relative to the death of General Alexander Dick, we find that we were mistaken in supposing him to be the oldest officer in the Bengal Cavalry. That distinction properly belongs to General Harry Thomson, who entered the service in 1798, or five years earlier than General Dick, and is still alive.

General Dick, moreover, was an infantry, and not a cavalry officer. It is true, however, as we said, that General Dick was nearly the oldest officer either in H.M.'s British or Indian Forces, for there are only two above him in the Gradation List, namely, General Sir H. E. A. Taylor, K.C.B., and General Harry Thomson, both of whom not only entered the service in the same year (1798), but also, we understand, sailed for India in the same vessel early in the closing year of the last century.

THE annuities from the Bombay Medical Retiring Fund for the year have been allotted as follows:—£252 to Inspector-General of Hospitals T. W. Ward; £210 to Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals H. Pitman; £168 to Surgeon-Major R. G. Lord. The annuity of £210 released by Dr. Ward has been assigned to Surgeon-Major J. Y. Smith, and that of £168 released by Dr. Pitman has been allotted to Surgeon-Major J. Mills.

A MISUNDERSTANDING CLEARED UP.—Mr. Forbes, of the Daily News, writes as follows to the editor of the Bombay Gazette in explanation of what occurred at Makhanpura:—"I returned from the Cheeta hunt to Makhanpura Palace on horseback, alighting simultaneously with some other gentlemen of the same profession. It was stated by these that an invitation to breakfast in the palace had been given to them at the instance of Sir T. Madava Row. My rejoinder was that it were well to make certain that there was no mistake; and with this intent I put the question whether it was intended we were to breakfast at the palace, to an officer specially attached to the Prince's staff. He replied that he had no doubt this was so, but, to guard against the possibility of error, he volunteered to find and ask Captain Jackson, the officer specially charged, as he stated, with the details of the arrangements. Captain Jackson came, and with much courtesy corroborated the other officer; and I then, and not till then, entered the verandah along with my brother journalists. A few minutes afterwards, a gentleman I had never before seen, and whose name was not communicated to me, came to me, desired to know my name, and then courteously enough, and with some embarrassment, stated that the party was a private one, that he was deputed to tell me so, and to suggest the natural action on my part consequent on this intimation. Feeling for the moment nettled at finding myself, in spite of my scrupulous care, in a false and in a sense humiliating position, I very briefly expressed annoyance that there should have been possible what my interlocutor termed a 'misconception' with regard to such a matter; and while proclaiming my eagerness to withdraw at once thought it due to myself that he should hear from Captain Jackson's own lips in my presence the truth that it was in consequence of that officer's assurance that my fellows and I were present where we were. Captain Jackson courteously and with good feeling gave this assurance; the two gentlemen combined in the further assurance that the 'misconception' had not been on my part; and this point having been satisfactorily established, I at once quitted the verandah—never having entered the palace. How insignificant the whole affair was, and how short-lived was my feeling of annoyance, may be gathered from the circumstance—if indeed it is worth narrating—that after a few words with a member of the suite of his Royal Highness I with all content recruited exhausted nature by breakfasting in a tent in the palace compound. You state that my 'offended dignity did not permit me to accept an explanation of the supposed insult, even though this explanation was offered by the Prince of Wales himself.' My 'dignity' had no concern in the matter. I merely felt for the moment that I was placed in a false position as a gentleman; the assurance that there had been a misconception explained away what had looked like not an 'insult,' but a slight; and any explanation, directly or indirectly, on the part of his Royal Highness of a misunderstanding to which in no sense was he a party, was neither called for nor expected—and was not given. With reference to your introduction of Mr. Melvill's name, I can only state that till the present moment I have not the honour to know that gentleman, and I can therefore have no reason to dissent from your statement that he is 'as courteous a gentleman as can be found in India or in England.'"

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, January 3, 1876.

THE NEW VOLUME OF KAYE'S "SEPOY WAR."*

IN the preface to the Third Volume of his last and greatest work, Sir John Kaye accounts for the delay in its publication by the sad but sufficient plea of illness. With a praiseworthy conviction of what he owed alike to himself and the public, he would not be tempted either to "finish it anyhow," or to get some one to help him. For his own and his readers' sake we are glad that he has at length succeeded in carrying on his self-imposed labour in his own way; and we hope that life and health will long be spared him to complete his arduous undertaking on the scale hitherto preserved. Anyhow, we may congratulate him on having got through the hardest and most important part of his work. There is much yet to tell of the momentous struggle for life and death which dates from the murderous outbreak of the 10th May, 1857, and the story alone of Sir Hugh Rose's marvellous achievements in Central India will demand no little room for its due narration; to say nothing of the successive campaigns of Havelock, Outram, and Sir Colin Campbell in Oudh, or of the many minor movements and events which mark the closing scenes of the Great Mutiny. But with the fall of Delhi in September, 1857, begins the true turning-point in the history of that eventful time. Till then our ascendency in India hung "epi xurou akmê"—on the razor's edge, and no one within the wide circle of danger could feel sure of early deliverance. The capture of the rebel stronghold proclaimed the dawning of a happier day, when men could once more breathe freely, as aware that the neck of the Mutiny had at last been broken; that the power of our enemies to undo the work of Clive and his successors had already passed away; that the storm in short which had burst so suddenly and raged for a time with so much fury, had wellnigh blown itself out, leaving the good ship not wholly a wreck upon the still troubled waters.

Never was the romance of Indian history more strangely exemplified than in Sir John Kaye's truthful narrative, and in the present volume that romance reaches its height. The Tragedy of Cawnpore had been told in the second volume, but instead of that we have the moving tale of the defence of Lucknow, the shameful incidents of the Dinapore outbreak, the heart-stirring details of the siege and relief of Arrah, the crowning triumph of English pluck in the storming of Delhi, marred by the untimely death of Nicholson; besides a hundred minor passages which send a thrill of horror, pity, rage, shame, exultation, as the case may be, to the reader's heart. These, too, are fitly relieved by scenes of a lighter or less tragical sort, such as the account of "Panic Sunday" in Calcutta, the life led by English folk in the Agra Fort, and various details of personal character relating to Lord Canning and other eminent men of the time. To one so anxious as Sir John Kaye to leave no part of his great but complicated theme untouched, to give each actor and incident their proper place in the story, and to speak the truth out so far as he could get at it on every noteworthy subject, the very abundance of his materials afforded fresh cause for delay and perplexity in carrying out his work. We can see from his preface how sorely he felt the cruel necessity of omitting many things which it "would have been only a delight" to him to narrate; but history and the reader's patience alike have their limits, and no one can fairly blame the author for paying just regard to human exigencies.

That the story he tells is more or less coloured by his political prepossessions, it is needless to repeat here; but his truthfulness of purpose and the essential fairness of his statements are as conspicuous in this volume as his diligence in collecting facts and the literary skill with which he presents them. If his portrait of Lord Canning is a little too brightly painted to please some readers, it is very satisfactory to find Sir John Kaye rescuing the fair fame of Mr. W. Tayler, the Commissioner of Patna, from undeserved obloquy; and those who remember the circumstances of Sir H. Durand's flight from Indor will thank him for his just vindication of Holkar and Captain Hungerford at Sir Henry's expense. It seems clear to us that Durand's ill-founded distrust of that prince, and his wrong views touching a Native chief's responsibility for the conduct of his troops, impelled him to abandon his post at the very moment when help from Mhow was close at hand. For similar conduct under yet more trying conditions Mr. W. Tayler was severely censured and removed from office, whereas Sir H. Durand, in spite of the opinion expressed of him by Sir John Low, not only escaped all censure, but succeeded in rising from one post of honour to another. Many other instances of the author's fearless zeal for searching out and setting forth the truth might be mentioned here, if space permitted us to go through them. For the present however we can only refer to the tribute paid by him to the marvellous heroism of Baird Smith, our Chief Engineer during the siege of Delhi, but for whose overbearing energy and fearless scorn of ordinary rules General Wilson might never have sanctioned the last desperate assault upon the rebel stronghold. So loath was that officer to stake all on what seemed to him a gambler's throw, that Nicholson and other of his bravest subalterns were prepared, if he still hung back, to place him under arrest and choose Baird Smith or some other trustworthy leader in his stead.

RETIRED COLONELS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Will you kindly, for the benefit of your military readers, publish in continuation of the last list a fresh one up to the end of this year of the Lieutenant Colonels who have retired under the Government Retirement Scheme for this year, specifying dates of retirement, and the amount of pension received? I should also feel very much obliged if you could kindly inform me whether any officers have been allowed to alter the dates of their retirement.—Yours truly, SOLDAT.

[We are making inquiries on this subject, and hope soon to satisfy our correspondent.—ED. A.I.M.]

COLONEL BURN.—We hear that Lieut.-Colonel Burn, S.C., Manager of the Minor Rajah of Durbungah's Estate, purposes taking furlough to Europe. A Bengal civilian will, it is said, obtain the acting appointment. Mr. A. Mackenzie will probably be the lucky man.—Indian Daily News, Nov. 27.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

The Indian Statesman is firmly convinced that the system of open competition has up to the present been successful, and if the growing wants of the age demand any alterations, do not let us approach the matter in an iconoclastic spirit; but simply rejecting all that has been proved injurious to the public good, re-model the rest of the system with due regard to good policy and the equitable claims of those whose position we are about to alter. We think, this is a proper place in which to point out that the very large majority of those who entered the Indian Civil Service under the Open Competition System have much to complain of with regard to the inducements held out to them in England. Promises, which have never been revoked, were made of rapid promotion and fortunes to be saved out of what in England or anywhere else certainly appear very handsome incomes. Have these promises been realised? We say, without fear of contradiction, that, with very few exceptions, they have not; nor does there, at present, appear any probability of their being so. Before the English Government remodels the interior of the system, let them remove the tinsel gauds which deceive the public and buoy up the deluding hopes of the ambitious youths of the great middle-class of England. Let them show the prospects of a twenty-one years' residence in India in their true light, and then, when they see the other faults of the system rising into the daylight of truth, let them one by one reform and regulate them. This, in our opinion, is the first step which must be taken towards the rejuvenescence of the system of selection of members of the Indian Civil Service. With respect to Professor Williams's Indian Institutes we may probably speak on another occasion. In the meantime we submit, with confidence, to the Indian Civil Service particularly, and the Indian public generally, the following points for reflection: 1. Open competition, as a system, has not proved a failure. 2. Any reforms which are needful, are superficial, not radical, and do not demand that the whole system should be torn to atoms, or that we should return to the effete and meretricious magnificence of an exploded policy of nepotism and nominations.

SUBALTERNS JOINING THE STAFF CORPS.

The Times of India says that while it has always steadily opposed the withdrawing of subalterns from the already under-officered native regiments of the three Presidencies, and deprecated the constant depletion of those regiments in order that young men might be found for the various departments, from the prized Political to the humble Commissariat, yet at the same time, since every question has two sides to it, it is only fair to ask, what are the prospects of subalterns joining the Staff Corps from British regiments, when they must be content with a purely military career? Many of these young subalterns on first being appointed to native regiments naturally wish to obtain the appointment of adjutant, and this is quite natural, for an adjutancy is at once well paid, and is looked upon as a pleasant post, that certainly has its responsibility, but is also the appointment that leads naturally to that of brigade-major, and finally to the Adjutant General's Department. But in 1868 the Commander-in-Chief of India issued an order that a subaltern who was adjutant might retain his appointment on promotion to captain; and in 1872 a further order was issued that captains who had held the appointment for five years might hold it for another five, if their commanding officers were satisfied with them, and applied for their services; and the consequence is, that of the thirty native regiments in this Presidency, sixteen have captains as adjutants. We cannot altogether approve of this order of Lord Napier's. We think it creates too great a block in regiments, and that many young officers are disgusted at the thought that the adjutant of their corps can hold his appointment until he is a major, which event is very likely some six or seven years off. The same remarks apply to the appointment of quartermaster, which is, however, poorly paid, and not much sought after. Our own opinion is that if captains were allowed to hold their adjutancies or quartermasterships for three years after their promotion, it would be all they have a right to expect, and it would besides make way for younger men. It must be remembered that there is a thorough stagnation in the Bombay Army. There are commandants desperately holding on for their off-reckonings; seconds in command of thirty years' service, and without the slightest idea of when they are to have a regiment; while lieutenant colonels who really ought to have regiments themselves are glad to put up with the post of wing officer.

THE NEW GOVERNOR OF MADRAS.

The Bombay Gazette deems it probable that, if Mr. Disraeli remains in office long enough, the Duke of Buckingham will succeed Lord Northbrook when the latter retires. In Madras the Duke will have been afforded the opportunity of making himself thoroughly well acquainted with many things relating to India and her people. Whether he avails himself of the chance is another matter. His Grace's probationary experiences of Southern India will not much avail him for service in the North if he follows the example of some of his predecessors, and buries himself among a few Anglo-Indian place-hunters and pleasure-seekers on the Neilgherry Mountains. Experiences of this kind are more likely to do mischief than good. But we hope more of the man who is better known as Marquis of Chandos than Duke of Buckingham than this. It seems impossible that a really conscientious man, as the Duke is well known to be, should voluntarily take charge of millions of people, and, to English ideas, an immense country as well, without the intention of fulfilling the duties evidently appertaining to so weighty a trust. If the Duke of Buckingham travels north and south, east and west, over his new dominions, and determines to see things for himself and not through the glasses of club-haunting old Madrassees, he will be able to do an immense deal of good among the benighted, and effect something like a revolution in the Presidency. He must make up his mind that the Madras coach has got into a groove or a rut, out of which it is very advisable to lift it even at some risk of an upset; otherwise the old story of Dowb as coachman, Pleasure on the box-seat, and Duty in the rumble will be re-enacted, and a chance lost which Madras is not likely to get in a hurry again. Indeed, it is an extraordinary thing that, even with existence at Ootacamund in prospective, the Duke of Buckingham should resign public life in England for public life in Madras. We suppose the chance of the Vice-Royalty was too good to be thrown away. It is a wearisome life, that of Governor of Madras, if Sir William Denison's book faithfully describes it, and it appears to us that nothing but its duties could reconcile us to its pleasures. An active man with an inclination to sport might, indeed, combine pleasure and duty together very well in Madras, for there are splendid rivers and mountains, such as the Godavery and Annamullay Hills, which a Governor might explore with great advantage to the public. Unluckily, the average Madras Governor abhors camping out of all things, and is better at looking after his own comforts than his subjects' interests. Public spirit is the one thing needful in most of them, and we may hope for Madras's sake, as well as for that of India, that the Duke of Buckingham will be an exception to a rule of long standing.

DR. MACNAMARA.—We learn that Dr. Charles Macnamara has been appointed Professor of Ophthalmic Surgery to Westminster Hospital, London. We may, therefore, conclude that there is no likelihood of his returning to Calcutta.—Indian Daily News.

OLD GOA.—(GOA, Nov. 27.)—Col. Schneider, Col. Lyon, Mrs. and Miss Lyon, Mr. Spence, C.S., Mr. Hammick, C.S., and several others made an excursion up the estuary to Old Goa. The tide was running strongly against us, but fourteen oarsmen, who sang, and chattered, and yelled enthusiastically all the way made light of the journey, which was reached in about two hours' time. Lovely scenery met the eye at every turn. On one hill the Jesuit College looked like an old castle on the Rhine; and other buildings emerging upon the blue waters from groves of trees helped to carry out the illusion. The old town of Goa is one of the most beautiful places on the face of the earth. It is filled with groves, rising ground, and handsome houses; but after all it is like a Dead Sea apple, beautiful to behold only on the outside. Long grass grows up to the doorsteps of palatial buildings; the walls are broken down and in ruins, and overgrown with rank vegetation; the Cathedrals, splendid relics of the past glory of the Portuguese power and priesthood in India, are deserted by all but a few monks, while jackals howl disconsolately at the mouldering and gigantic portals. Old Goa is a City of the Dead, a younger Nineveh or Memphis, an epitome of desolation. It had to be deserted many years ago because of the plagues that decimated the people. Doubtless the plague was due to the swamps of mangrove that surrounded and still surround the ancient city. Your readers are probably acquainted with the appearance of the See—a gigantic cathedral, white without, and within divided into chapels full of gilded altars and silver censers. Banners are suspended across the roof of the nave; and the choir, with its somewhat theatrical tapestry, its old organ, its tumbledown black wood reading stand, is a strange mixture of faded symbols of pristine greatness and signs of present religious fervour. The Church of Bom Jesus, which contains the Sarcophagus of Saint Xavier, is not far from the See, and is reached by faded dusty lanes where the cactus is pushing the old red laterite walls to the ground. St. Xavier's splendid tomb, surrounded by relics and the offerings of people who imagine they have been cured by his virtues, is too well known to Bombay people to need further description. The excursionists returned to the Puttialla at four o'clock, after which the Raja of Kolapore and the other Rajas received the Portugnese Viceroy on board with honours. The ceremony took place on the saloon deck, and was soon over, being terminated by a distribution of pan soparee and garlands of flowers. While we were at dinner that night we heard guns firing at Aguada Fort, and shortly afterwards news was brought on board that the Serapis with the Prince had arrived at the mouth of the harbour. Early next morning the Puttialla left for Deogurh with the Rajas, and a number of the passengers parted from Captain Crowder with considerable regret.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

STATION TALK.

UDAIPUR, Dec. 4.—On arrival at the gateway of the city, the Viceroy alighted with the Maharana from his elephant, entered a carriage with Mr. Lyall and drove to the palace, which is an extensive building, surrounded with gardens. In the centre of the garden is a large fountain, from which avenues paved with marble diverge in all directions, amidst groves of pomegranate and orange trees. A marble gallery encircles the garden, which at night was beautifully illuminated. This being the first time a Governor-General had ever visited the capital of Meywar, the city put on its best appearance, and there were crowds in the streets. The Oodeypore Maharans claim direct descent from Rama, the children of whom arrogated to themselves the title of Sooryavansa, or "children of the sun." In Tod's "Rajasthan" in relating the history of Meywar, he shows first one tribe uppermost and holding the throne, then another branch victorious—a marriage with a Bheel family, and lastly, a series of adoptions which must utterly vitiate any genealogical chart. The Meywarees have some claim to consideration, in the fact that they gallantly held their country throughout the whole period of the Mogul power, and were the only people in Rajpootana who did not supply a Princess for one of the Emperors of Delhi. If true, that at the reception of the Prince of Wales last month in Bombay, the Rana refused to sit in the seat appointed for him, on account of his secular and sacerdotal powers, which latter he claims as performing the offices of priest at the celebrated temple of Echinga, it is to be hoped the Viceroy pointed out to him during this visit that it cannot be accepted as a reason for precedence in a British durbar, more especially as the Rana is only an adopted heir, from a very distant branch of some former Maharana's family, and has only just been a twelvemonth on the gaddee. From Oodeypore the party were expected to visit Deolee, one of the institutions of Rajpootana, and the head-quarters which bears its name of the Irregular force. Deolee is situated near the banks of the River Banaas, at a point where the States of British Ajmere, Meywar, Jeypore and Bhoondee converge; it is the military post of what is known as the Meena district of the Harowti Agency. In other words, it is the site of a successful experiment in taming wild tribes, and attracting them into a steady, agricultural life. Just as Outram tamed the Bheels near Dhoolia, so the late General Hall tamed the Meenas. Rajpootana can show more than one noble work of the kind. By similar means the Mhairs were induced to abandon their cattle-lifting raids; and the formation of local corps at Khairwarra and Erinpoora have also contributed to a certain extent to quiet a most unsettled tract of country. The Meenas are a race which the proud Rajpoot affects to despise; he belongs not to one of the thirty-six Royal races of India. In Jeypore, for instance, the Meenas, although conquered after a severe struggle by the Rutchwada Rajpoots, secured very favourable terms for themselves, and are to this day the hereditary custodians of the public treasury, and have the exclusive privilege of constituting the city watch of the capital. The present city of Jeypore is of recent origin, and a legend is current that in the grounds of the ancient capital, named Amber, which was a strong fortress in the bosom of rugged hills, the Meenas kings guard over a vast accumulation of treasure, to which access is denied even to the Rajah of Jeypore himself. In the hour of extreme peril, and when other resources have been spent, this wealth will be surrendered, to be used for the promotion of the national weal, but until such crisis shall appear, its guardians refuse to yield a pie, and are able to defend their charge. If treasures be hid there, they must be very little, for the history of Jeypore for many years after it acknowledged our supremacy was that of a State in the worst form of disorganisation, crushed by the heavy incidence of our tribute of eight lakhs, to which was superadded the maintenance of the Shekawattee Battalion, under the late Colonel Foster; torn by internal dissensions aggravated by our vacillating policy; the prey of Jootha Ram, the most unscrupulous of oriental ministers; in fact, for many years it was in a condition which would have justified the surrender of the hidden hoard, and was in the hands of men who would not have hesitated for one moment to acquire it by force or fraud. The Viceregal party at Ajmere will be rejoined by Miss Baring, her brother, and Colonel Earle, and would leave on the 3rd (yesterday) by train for the Sambhur Lake, where Major Beynon, Political Agent at Jeypore, joins Lord Northbrook, and escorts him to that city, where great festivities are to take place. It is almost a pity the Prince of Wales could not have accompanied the Viceroy on this interesting tour; he would have really seen more of oriental scenery and customs than he ever will do in the tour laid down for him, besides becoming acquainted with some of the most ancient of the Rajpoot Chiefs. Whilst the Viceroy was at Dhar, in company with the Rajah and Sir Henry Daly, they visited the fort, the breaches of which have not been repaired since the mutiny. The Viceroy did a very graceful act in allowing the Rajah, as a token of his loyalty to the British since his taking up his gaddee in 1864, to repair these breaches in the fort, and to put it in thorough repair. —Times of India Correspondent.

EDUCATIONAL.—It is reported that Government has given Mrt Atkinson, Director of Public Instruction in Bengal, who was abous to retire under the fifty-five years'-rule, a further tenure of hi office for three years.—Englishman, Nov. 30.

DEATH OF MR. CUNNINGHAM.—The Lahor paper announces the death on Friday, December 10th, of Mr. H. Cunningham, for the last five years proprietor of the Lahor Club, and a well-known citizen of Lahor. The deceased had for some time been suffering from an internal complaint and a variety of constitutional disorders. A few weeks ago he was operated upon and was progressing most satisfactorily towards recovery when he was attacked by dysentery, and succumbed to that disease just after midnight.

CIVIL.—It is rumoured in Lahore, says Indian Public Opinion, that on Mr. Thornton's vacating the Punjab Secretariat to take over charge of the Foreign-office portfolio from Mr. C. U. Aitchison, Mr. Lepel Griffin will, as has been already hinted, be translated from Kapurthalla to the Punjab Secretaryship, his place as Superintendent of Kapurthalla being taken by Mr. C. M. Rivaz, who will be again succeeded as Under Secretary by Mr. C. L. Tupper, whose special duty will in all probability by that time have been completed, so as to place him at the disposal of his Honour for any suitable appointment which may then be vacant.

POLICE.—A Calcutta contemporary says:—"Some significance, which we have not yet been able to unravel, seems to attach to the fact of a new department being created in connection with the Calcutta police, viz., that of a 'Political Department,' as it is termed; the duties of the officers connected with which seem to be the scrutinising of every new arrival from Cabul, Peshawur, and other up-country stations, by the several railway trains which come into Calcutta from the North-Western Provinces. We shall be glad to be enlightened with the working and doings of the above department and the object in view."

FURLOUGH RULES.—A despatch from the Secretary of State to the Governor-General in Council says:—"My Lord,—Major-General ——, of the Royal (Bengal) Engineers, now on furlough for two years, has raised the question whether, in the event of his obtaining an extension of such furlough, he will be entitled to retain his appointment in the Public Works Department; and I have to inform you that, with reference to this application, I have decided that the rule under which officers of the Staff Corps and Local Service retain their appointments during all authorised leave shall be made applicable to all military and medical officers taking leave under the rules of 1868."

DEATHS OF OFFICERS.—During the last few weeks several deaths have occurred amongst military officers in and near Calcutta. We regret, says the Indian Daily News, to have to add two more names to the list. The friends of Major W. Ker, of the Buffs, will not be unprepared to hear of his having succumbed on Sunday evening, December 5th, to the long and painful illness with which he has been so long afflicted. It is more difficult to realise that Major Brudenell Rogers, B.S.C., who four days ago was in the apparent enjoyment of perfect health, is now no more; he died on Monday morning after an illness of forty-eight hours. The remains of both officers were interred on Monday evening with military honours.

COLONEL HYDE.—A small paragraph appeared in our impression of Saturday last to the effect that Colonel H. Hyde, R.E., Master of the Calcutta Mint, purposes retiring from the service in February next. It appears now that our information is incorrect to a certain extent. The fact is that the gallant Colonel intends to proceed—probably by the middle of the next month—on two years' furlough, under the military rules, and that, after the expiration of that period, to retire from the service, when he will be entitled to a Colonel's allowance. We believe his application for leave has already been submitted to the Army Head-Quarters, and an intimation made to the Civil Department. It is probable that Colonel Tennant, R.E., will succeed him.—Indian Daily News, Dec. 4.

MEDICAL.—The Lahore paper publishes the following items of news about certain official changes:—"Dr. Center, Chemical Examiner to the Punjab Government, has, we understand, been offered and has accepted the Chemical Professorship in the Calcutta Medical College and the Chemical Examinership of Bengal, which is about to be vacated by Dr. MacNamara. We hear that Dr. Center is on his way out to India to join, if he has not already arrived in the country. Dr. Stephen, if not provided for otherwise, namely, by being gazetted to the post of Superintendent of the Central Jail, which, we understand, may possibly be vacated, will succeed Dr. Center; in other words, he will be confirmed in the appointment of Chemical Examiner. Dr. C. W. Calthrop will officiate for Dr. Stephen in the interim; but in the event of Dr. Henderson vacating the Jail Superintendentship, he (Dr. Calthrop) will in all probability be permanently appointed to the Chemical Examinership.

TREATY WITH HOLKAR.—A Correspondent of the Indian Mirror writes from Indore as follows:—"On the occasion of the late visit of Lord Northbrook to Indore, Maharaja Holkar concluded a very important treaty with the British Government. The Maharaja has agreed to abolish the Mint in his own capital and to receive from the Government Mint at Bombay all coins to be used in his dominions. For this consideration, the British Government will pay his Highness Rs. 25,000 per annum. It has been settled that the new coin should have on one side the stamp of the British Government and on the other that of his Highness. It would be of the same weight and value as the British rupee, and would be legal tender throughout British India, being received at par in the Government Treasuries."

TOBACCO CULTURE IN THE NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES.—Some very satisfactory arrangements have been made, it is said, by the North-West Government in reference to the cultivation of tobacco in those provinces. The ground formerly occupied by the Stud Department at Ghazeepore has been leased to Messrs. Begg, Dunlop and Co., under conditions which will make it worth their while to import skilled labour from Virginia. The Director of Agriculture, Mr. E. C. Buck, wished at one time to visit Manila, and study the tobacco culture in the Portuguese school, but the jealousy of the Manila Government stood in the way. If India is thus driven to learn cigar-making of the Americans, her smokers will be all the better off in the long run. In reference to cheroots, the most resolute Tory will be pleased to Americanise our institutions.

MONUMENT TO DR. STOLICZKA.—A monument is being erected at Leh by the Government of India, in memory of the late Dr. Stoliczka, who died on the return journey of the last British Embassy from Yarkand. It is to be an obelisk of granite quarried in the neighbourhood of the site, with the inscriptions in Latin and English on marble slabs. The design is by Mr. Kirby, Executive Engineer of Kangsu, and the work is being executed under the superintendence of Mr. Morris. The foundation has already been laid, and the work closed for the winter, to be resumed and completed next year. The tablets meanwhile are being prepared at Delhi. The grave itself is within a walled enclosure, in a grove of poplar trees, about a hundred and fifty yards from the residence of the British Commissioner. The site is highly picturesque; to the north lies the lofty Kardung range, and to the south-east are the Kowri and other snow-clad peaks.

THE VICEROY IN JAIPUR.—Lord Northbrook visited Amber, the ancient and beautiful capital of Jaipur, privately on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 5. On Monday morning the Maharaja visited his Excellency at the Residency. The return visit to the Maharaja at the Palace was paid at 11 A.M. Both interviews were private. After seeing the Palace, the College was inspected and prizes given to the pupils. Lord Northbrook congratulated the Maharaja on its high state of efficiency, and incidentally referred to the great loss sustained in the death of Dr. Wilson, of Bombay. The Mayo Hospital was opened and the statue of Lord Mayo unveiled in the afternoon. The Maharaja made a feeling speech in Hindi. In reply, his Excellency, after thanking his Highness for his graceful tribute to the Earl's memory, passed a brilliant eulogy upon his character. The Viceroy left for Agra at 9 A.M. Yesterday evening there was a banquet at the Palace, followed by fireworks. The city was brilliantly illuminated. In reply to a speech, in which the Maharaja proposed his health, he stated that his tour through Central India had afforded him much satisfaction; that everywhere he had found hearty and royal welcome, and nowhere had he been more pleased than at Jaipur.

THE CAMP OF EXERCISE.—The names of the officers about to proceed to the Delhi Camp of Exercise as representatives of the Bombay Army have been published in General Orders, and the various branches of the service are duly represented. The Artillery send Lieutenant-Colonel Harris, Assistant-Adjutant General of that corps, an officer who was in the last Persian campaign, and saw a good deal of fighting during the mutiny under Sir Hugh Rose. Colonel Barry, C.B, is the other officer sent by the Artillery, and he has been very fortunate in the extent and variety of the service he has seen, having been at the battles of Alma, Balaclava, and Inkerman, besides being at the relief of Lucknow, the battle of Cawnpore and siege and capture of Lucknow. He afterwards went to China under Sir Hope Grant, and was at the capture of the Taku Forts, and the surrender of Peking. The British Infantry is represented by Colonel Wilkinson, 2nd Battalion 15th Foot, who has seen service in Ceylon, and the Native Infantry by Colonel J. A. Wood, V.C., who saw fighting in Afghanistan during 1840-43, was at the battle of Hyderabad in the Scinde campaign, and finally won his Victoria Cross in Persia in 1856-57. The Native Cavalry sends Colonel Blair, V.C., an officer who did good service during the mutiny, at the sieges of Neemuch and Kotah, and during the pursuit of the rebel Tantia Topee. Our list concludes with the name of Russuldar-Major Bennee Singh, an old and gallant native officer of the 3rd Light Cavalry. The duties of these officers have, we learn, been defined, and they are to act as Assistant Umpires, which will entail on them a good deal of hard work, considerable knocking about, and the certainty of being abused by those to whom their decisions are adverse. They were to have left on the 1st or 2nd instant. We are sure everyone must allow that the Bombay Army is worthily represented.—Times of India.

STATION TALK.

RANGOON, Nov. 20.—In a large town like this, with a jail population exceeding two thousand, there must constantly be simmering a certain amount of sedition, and consequent rumours of tumult and treason. On the evening of the 12th the town magistrate, Mr. McIver, received information of a projected emeute, and sent the informant on to Mr. Fforde, the police superintendent, without losing his appetite for dinner. Mr. Fforde, however, in the interim had received authentic information from other sources that a rising would take place that very night, and that the arsenal would probably be the first thing attacked. The alarm was given to the garrison, the guards doubled, and other suitable precautions taken; and a large number of arrests was ordered in the town and its vicinity. There is absolutely no doubt, from the confession of the principal parties concerned, that an organised outbreak had been planned for the night of the 12th, though different reasons are given for the abandonment of the scheme, the most probable being the inability to procure arms. The ringleader of the conspiracy was one Moung Bwa, a political refugee from Upper Burmah. He designed nothing more or less than a night attack by some thousands of his countrymen on the town and cantonment, a general massacre of Europeans, and Royalty, more or less temporary, in

Digitized by Google

Rangoon for his own victorious arms. Several considerable men in villages adjoining the town had promised him their adhesion and separate contingents, and to each was assigned a different point of attack. Operations were to commence by a kyoung being fired near the cantonment. It was contemplated that the Sikhs would turn out to extinguish the fire, leaving their barracks comparatively defenceless, and it was there the insurgents hoped to obtain a supply of arms. Another party were to attack the Fusilier lines, and the stronger contingent was directed against the arsenal, while the European residents and shops were reserved for Moung Bwa and his own immediate followers. Great exertions were to be made for the complete and speedy capture of the flagstaff, the pagoda and the courts, as being the three outward and visible signs of our sovereignty in the country. The jail was to be dealt with by a separate gang, the convicts (so it is said) having arranged for a simultaneous outbreak. The whole scheme sounds too incredible to have been conceived by any but the most demented of maniacs, as the rioters were wholly unable to procure a supply of arms to assist them in their preliminary aggressions. It has been clearly ascertained, however, that a plot of this description has actually been concerted during the last four months, though it is not quite evident why it was abandoned or adjourned. Had the conspirators ventured on any action, they would never have attacked the military, nor have dared anything but a somewhat exaggerated dacoity. It is probable, however, that murder and arson would have resulted, but Messrs. McIver and Fforde deserve credit for having so promptly repressed all disturbances without the public experiencing the shadow of apprehension. The result of the inquiry is not yet officially known; but by the time this letter arrives, you will probably have heard the last of the "Rangoon revolution." Had Moung Bwa possessed ordinary intelligence, he might have effected a clean sweep of every important Government official of the place. At the time of the races the grand stand was entirely undefended, and two or three hundred Burmans might have completely altered the appearance of the Commission.—Pioneer Correspondent.

MEDALS.—In honour of the visit of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the following prizes have been placed at the disposal of the Director of Public Instruction in Mysore by a native gentleman:—To the student, being a native of the Mysore Province, who shall secure the highest place in the Matriculation Examination to be held in Bangalore in December next, (1) in Sanscrit, a gold medal; (2) in Kanarese, a silver medal.—Bangalore Spectator.

ROBBING PETER TO PAY PAUL.—Mr. Robinson's Government thought it necessary to increase the salary of Mr. Hamnet, the Head Assistant of the Chief Secretary's Department, but were at a loss to know from what financial resource this was to be met. Mr. Hamnet, however, who is ever ready to point out where retrenchment may be effected, suggested that the salary of the Head Assistant in the Revenue Department might be reduced from Rs. 600 to Rs. 500, and the saving thereby effected appropriated to his own salary.—Madras Mail, Nov. 30.

THE PRINCE AND THE POOR OF MADRAS.—It is proposed to give a substantial, but plain meal to the very poor of Madras each day, during the Prince of Wales' stay in Madras. It has been ascertained that food will have to be provided for 15,295 poor people; and that it will cost Rs. 2,580 per diem. The total amount required is upwards of Rs. 15,000—no inconsiderable sum to ask for at this date, says the Madras Mail, from a public that has already put itself to a good deal of expense in connection with the Royal visit. A large proportion of the sum already subscribed for the public demonstration must have been expended in giving employment to crowds of coolies, carpenters, plasterers, tinmen, tailors, &c.

THE DEPARTURE OF THE 18TH HUSSARS FOR ENGLAND.—This gallant and distinguished regiment leaves Bangalore by special train this afternoon for Bombay for embarkation to England, under the command of Colonel Prettejohn, C.B. The corps came out in September, 1864, under the command of Colonel Knox, and after a short stay here proceeded to Hyderabad at the end of 1865, returning to this station in January 1872. Though not having the good fortune to take the field during its Indian tour of service, the Hussars having spent most of their time in a native State, which of all others in India contains the most peppery and disaffected population, and if it has not been their fault that they have not been called on to help to reduce Hyderabad to that state of absolute submission to British rule, that must come sooner or later, we may be quite sure that if necessary they would have been "all there," if a row had taken place.—Bangalor Spectator, Dec. 7.

A PRETTY STATE OF AFFAIRS.—The Trichinopoly paper writes:—"The Brigade Parade on Wednesday was cancelled from a paucity of officers. The 19th had only one officer, the 2nd in command, available, and the 32nd only the adjutant. Musketry has laid up both wing officers of the 32nd. Is it not cruel of Government keeping European officers out in the sun until noon, going through the musketry farce? The Artillery horses sent it to Pothanore for the Prince have been recalled. Would it be believed the railway cannot arrange to bring back those horses before December 3 except in small parties? The latter plan has been adopted, so ten horses are to return daily. The Prussians without any warning moved in twenty days 300,000 men, 70,000 horses, 6,000 guns, besides provisions, and here in India the railway wants fifteen days' warning to move seventy horses and forty men."—Madras Times, Nov. 30.

THE LATE RESIDENT AT HAIDARABAD.—Our Haidarabad correspondent, writing on the 7th Dec., says:—"We have lost Mr. Saunders, He left by train on Saturday morning last, a salute of thirteen guns fired from the "mud" battery at Secunderabad in the afternoon indicating the fact to all whom it concerned. Sir Richard Meade arrived the same evening, the process of handing over and receiving the office of Resident being accomplished at a station on the line of railway. All sorts of rumours are of course afloat to account for Mr. Saunders's abrupt resignation and departure. Professedly the cause lies in the continued illness of his wife, though from what I hear I don't think she is likely to be much benefited by a change to the vile climate which England offers to the invalid at this season of the year. Some say the late Resident is made the scapegoat of the Supreme Government, which was terribly irritated by the publication in your columns of his correspondence with Sir Salar Jung. I hear on good authority that the whole of his letters addressed to the Minister were dictated by the Supreme Government—if not the exact words, still the sense and spirit of them; and that in writing as he did Mr. Saunders simply complied with his official instructions. If such be the case it seems then rather hard on the late Resident to be punished—if he is punished—for obeying the orders of his superiors. But, perhaps, he just stepped beyond the fine line of demarcation which lies between firmness and bluntness. Mr. Saunders may not have been a born diplomat, but he was a very good-hearted and well-meaning man, and many persons living in this quarter will doubtless regret his departure."—Times of India.

THE REVIEW ON THE ISLAND.—There was a grand military spectacle on the Island yesterday morning, when a detachment of the Queen's 16th Lancers, the Governor's Body Guard, H.M.'s 89th Foot, the Infantry Volunteer Guards, and the three Native Regiments in garrison, were reviewed by his Excellency the Governor. The troops assembled on the ground at a quarter to five o'clock, and formed into two lines, the Queen's 16th Lancers being on the extreme right of the first line and the Volunteers to the left. His Grace the Duke of Buckingham, who wore his uniform of Lord Lieutenant of Bucks., scarlet and silver, and who rode a fine iron-grey charger, accompanied by a brilliant staff, arrived at a little after six o'clock, and was received with a general salute by the troops, the order for the same being given by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, who commanded the brigade. A salute of seventeen guns was fired at the same time from the battery in the Fort. His Grace rode down the line, commencing from the Lancers. There was then a march past the Saluting Flag in double companies. The troops returned and marched past again in regiments. The marching past was considered to be very good. After some other manœuvres, the regiments were drawn up in separate bodies at an interval of twelve paces from each other, facing the flag, and the officers and colours of the several regiments being called to the front of their respective corps. His Grace rode up and a general salute was given. The Duke then ordered the regiments to be marched to their respective quarters. The Volunteer Guards, both officers and men, mustered very strong on the occasion, and, before the regiment broke up, Colonel Ross-Church, their commandant, thanked them for their attendance, and informed them that his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief had expressed himself well pleased with the manner in which the Volunteers had acquitted themselves. His Excellency had been glad to observe a marked improvement in the dress, accoutrements, and the soldierly bearing of the Volunteers. Colonel Church trusted that the Volunteers, having earned such a good opinion, would endeavour to maintain it. He added that his Grace the Duke of Buckingham had accepted the office of Colonel-in-Chief of the Corps, which was a thing that could not but be regarded with much pride and satisfaction by the whole regiment. The review was witnessed by a number of spectators. The ladies and gentlemen who were present from Government House drove up in three carriages, the first carriage being drawn by four horses with postilions.—Madras Times, Dec. 4.

THE LATE DR. WILSON.

But Dr. Wilson was a missionary—and much more. He was a citizen in the broadest sense of the word, a stay and support of the State. Never a partisan, his opinion was always valued by experienced administrators; and while no one was more alive to real perils, it was generally found that his usually trustful and courageous estimate of political difficulties was the true and safe one. This aspect of his career was well brought out by the Hon. Mr. Tucker in his speech at the Asiatic Society's meeting in February, 1870, and especially so in a quotation from the current Native Opinion newspaper comprised therein. In that extract reference was made to the attitude and tone which Dr. Wilson maintained in the dark year of the Mutiny, when amidst the mingled anxiety and indignation that prevailed, even well-disposed and devotedly loyal native citizens "were indiscriminately confounded with the rebel sepoys of Bengal" in the suspicions and denunciations so freely indulged in on all sides. The Reverend Doctor showed himself superior to the panic of the time. He avowed that he was ready to go at any hour of the twenty-four into the densest quarters of this city without fear of being molested; and as the storm drew off, he stated as his deliberate conviction that he had seen nothing in Bombay "which would lead us to recede from our friendly intercommunication with the people or to pause in any of the general enterprises in which we are now engaged." The invaluable assistance which Dr. Wilson had been able to render to the Government of Lord Elphinstone in the hour of greatest anxiety was testified to by the Hon. Mr. Tucker. It was greatly in reliance on his opinions and knowledge of the several sections of the people—he almost vouched for the good behaviour of the Mussulmans of this presidency—that the Government of the day felt free to send so many troops away to the scene of open revolt, a course which, though apparently risking something in Western India, conduced very materially to the more speedy restoration of order in Hindustan. It was not merely a generous and confiding spirit which led Dr. Wilson aright in this as in some similar exigencies, but it was his intimate knowledge of the people and the ability so gained to estimate the strength of their feelings and gauge the current of their thoughts. As Mr. Tucker remarked: "It would be difficult to over-estimate the value to the British Government in India of men of the stamp of Dr. Wilson. One such man brings a greater accession of strength to our rule than a regiment of soldiers."

This is scarcely the place in which to assess the exact value of Dr. Wilson's labours as a philologist. These, in the proper sense of that term, were subsidiary or in addition to his acquisition and extensive use of the vernacular languages, for the study of which, as he has said, he "had the most powerful motives." The science of philology has been almost created since he landed in India forty-four years ago. Hence the value of his attainments in this respect must be estimated by the standard of thirty years ago. When Dr. Wilson entered on the study and exposition of the Zoroastrian books, it is scarcely likely that he could have derived much assistance from the labours of the German savants in that direction: therefore, in his investigation of the "Zend Avesta" he deserves the credit due to a pioneer. It may not be right to claim for him anything like the fine perceptivity of Burnouf, the keen insight of Grotefend, or the masterly grasp of Lassen; but, as the late Dr. Bhau Daji remarked of him, Dr. Wilson has been "the best popular exponent of the discoveries of those eminent Orientalists." It was more in accordance with his essentially popular aptitude and the general bent of his life's task that the strength of his linguistic faculties should be expended on the vernaculars. It is not too much to say that Dr. Wilson's influence on the side of this some time unduly disparaged branch of philology has proved a valuable educational force in Western India. If it be admitted that his early achieved steps in the higher walks of linguistic science have long since been passed in the accelerated progress of younger men, his successors, it must be remembered that he has been ever ready to acknowledge this, and in turn to confess his own obligation to other and later labourers.

Dr. Wilson's early and well directed efforts in aid of the movement against infanticide belong to the record of his services as a citizen and publicist. It is not needful to dwell upon them here; but we mention the subject by way of showing what a wide tract in the personal history of Bombay worthies is covered by the story of the long and active life now closed.—Times of India.

Miscellaneous.

ARRIVAL OF MR. CHARLES MATHEWS.—Mr. Charles Mathews arrived in Bombay on Thursday, December 9th, by the mail steamer. He was staying at Watson's Hotel. There was no probability that Mr. Mathews would act in Bombay, as he was to proceed to Calcutta with the least possible delay, but people were hoping to see him on the Bombay boards before he leaves India.

PRESENT TO CAPTAIN PORTMAN.—We have casually learnt that our energetic Superintendent of Police, Captain Portman, has been presented with a handsome cigar case by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, in token of his Royal Highness's appreciation of the admirable police arrangements made for the safety of the Prince during the royal visit to Poona. We are all aware of the onerous duties and responsibility which devolved upon Captain Portman on the occasion in question, and it is only right that we should notice the excellent police arrangements made by that officer, and so ably carried out by his subordinates.—Deccan Herald, Dec. 10.

DR. ANDREAS ON HIS TRAVELS.—Dr. Andreas, who left Bombay a few weeks ago to pursue scientific investigations in Persia, was, on his arrival at Karachi, hospitably entertained for ten days at Government House by Mr. Muloch, C.S., in the absence of the Commissioner in Sind. From Karachi the learned Doctor went to Hyderabad, where he was the guest for several days of Colonel Wallace. He afterwards proceeded to Tatta, and thence by land to Gwadur along the route taken by Alexander, so that he has had the opportunity of finding out all about the latter's march through the disputed land of Gedrosia.

DEATH OF MR. RADFORD.—We regret to hear from Sholapore of the sad death on Saturday last of Mr. Radford, the Permanent Way Inspector there. It seems that he fell from his horse when out riding, and was killed on the spot. He has left a wife and four children to lament his loss. What gives increasing sadness to this case is, that he had only the day before got the letter which conveyed a warning that his services would not be required any longer by the G.I.P. Railway Company. He had been accused of taking bribes from the labourers. This is thought to have preyed so much upon his mind as to have driven him well-nigh mad.—Deccan Herald, Dec. 1.

MR. LEE WARNER AND THE PARSIS.—The case of Mr. Lee Warner, Acting Under-Secretary to the Government of Bombay, against the sixteen Parsis, came on for hearing at the Fort Police-court on Tuesday last. The evidence clearly showed that the Parsis committed a brutal and most cowardly assault on very little provocation. A Bombay gharry-wallah is a notoriously repulsive specimen of humanity; but a Parsi shigram-wallah is even worse. Two of the drivers in the Parsi procession refused to make way for Mr. Warner's carriage, and two collisions between himself and them, and two buggies, were the consequence. The Under-Secretary then struck at the second driver with his whip, whereupon a "fat Parsi" opened his shigram door, stopped Mr. Warner's horse, and prepared to strike its owner. Mr. Warner defended himself by knocking the Parsi down; and this was the signal for a general assault upon him by all the Parsis in the procession. Mr. Warner suffered pretty severely from their fists, sticks, and umbrellas. The case was still under trial yesterday afternoon.—Pioneer, Dec. 4.

GOA HARBOUR.—Aguada may be considered the mouth of Goa Harbour. It would be difficult to conceive a more lovely estuary from its beginning at Aguada Lighthouse to its termination near Old Goa. It abounds in lovely bays, fringed to the water's edge with palm trees, with here and there peeping out among them the peculiar tall roof that is characteristic of the houses in this little Portuguese territory. The province of Goa has been described to me by an old and well-known resident, Mr. Major, as like a man's spread hand—only, every finger is a creek running deep into the land, sometimes even touching the feet of the blue ghauts that rise far away in the back-ground. Goa territory is about sixty miles by forty, but with such rich soil and extensive water communication to all parts of it it ought to be capable under an energetic Government of producing a splendid revenue. At present there is not a railway in Goa, although I hear that a British company, well known in Bombay, intend to make one shortly between Goa and Dharwar, thus tapping the cotton districts that lie beyond Goa. The only great public work in the territory is the long causeway that connects New Goa and Old Goa, the splendid buildings of which are now left apparently to a few priests and jackals. There is a lack of life about Goa which strikes a stranger. A sign of the poverty of the little country is perhaps the fact that the land at Caboo—the Viceroy or Governor-General's house at the end of Goa Island adjoining the sea,—is covered with jungle which swarms with tigers and cheetahs.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

A BOMBAY PANDIT.—On Monday last the native poet and Sanscrit scholar, Pandit Gattu Lalji, was honoured with a visit from two eminent European Professors of Sanscrit now in our midst, viz., Professor Monier Williams, of Oxford, and Dr. T. P. Mineffe, of the University of St. Petersburg. After the interchange of the usual salutations the Oxford savant expressed his gratification on being allowed the privilege of a visit to so distinguished an Oriental scholar as the Pandit, and hoped the latter would avail himself of his visitor's hospitality, if at any future time he should feel disposed to visit him at his Oxford home. The Pandit said in reply that such a contingency was not likely to occur, as it would involve a breach of the time-honoured custom of his country. This dialogue was carried on exclusively in Sanscrit, and at its close Professor Williams requested the Pandit to recite some impromptu verses on any subject of local and passing interest, to which the latter complied and produced a series of most abstruse Sanscrit verses celebrating the visit of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the triumphs of light and intelligence over the dense ignorance of this land, &c. On the termination of this arduous literary exercise, Pandit Guttoolal was presented with a copy of the donor's English translation of the "Sakoontala" from the original Sanscrit, and the Pandit acknowledged the gift by presenting Professor Williams with several of his own works. Later in the day the Russian savant was received at the Pandit's residence, when the same programme was gone through, and the Doctor took a copy of the impromptu compositions of his host, who, in addition to his other gifts, is said to possess extraordinary powers of memory. It is said that Dr. Mineffe intends publishing a narrative of his oriental travels and researches, and that he proposes inserting the Pandit's compositions in the promised volume.—Times of India, Dec. 6.

BOMBAY POLICE.—The best proof of the efficiency of the Bombay Police Force is, that during the Prince's visit not one accident occurred, and but one complaint, and that of a trifling nature, was received by the commissioner against a native constable. It is computed that while the Prince was here, and some time before his arrival, there were 200,000 additional inhabitants in the city. To meet the emergency Sir Frank Souter was allowed to entertain one hundred additional native constables, and the services of two district superintendents of police were placed at his disposal. Of the hundred additional native policemen sixty-six were placed on duty at Malabar Point and Parell, leaving thirty-four for service in the city. Three European constables were also stationed at Government House. The addition to the police force available for general duty was, therefore, only thirty-four policemen, and the value of the reinforcement was to some extent counterbalanced by the absence of the three Europeans on duty at Government House. We think that the force deserves credit for the satisfactory manner in which, without any material addition to their numbers, the members of it did their work. Capt. Heming, the Deputy Commissioner of Police in Madras, came here to observe the working of the force and the special arrangements made for the extra work during the Prince's visit. We have no doubt he was satisfied with them. On comparing our police arrangements for the Prince's visit with those of Madras, we find that, whereas Sir Frank Souter was allowed two Superintendents and 100 men, the Madras Government sanctioned the enlistment of 400 native constables to aid in the preservation of order during the Prince's visit. The head of the police there is also to have the assistance of one Deputy Inspector-General and three Superintendents of police during the same period. The population of Madras is little more than half that of Bombay. Sir Frank Souter has recommended Government to sanction a grant of half a month's pay to all the members of the force, from Superintendents to native constables. This sum, if granted, will amount to Rs. 12,429.—Times of India.

REMINISCENCES OF PUNA.—There are people who claim to have lived in Puna for years, and yet have never seen the heart of the native city. Its gloomy old port-holed fortalices, its crowded bazaars, and its ginger-bread-like minareted temples, lie some two miles away from the wide area of the cantonments, where, flanking the broad, well-kept roads, the bungalows of the British residents —civilian and military—nestle amid the exuberant foliage. The days of splendour, and to all appearance of prosperity, are departed from Puna, with its seven districts, each named after a day of the week. Puna is a stronghold of Brahmans, and, under the Peishwas, was the capital of a Brahman dynasty; it abounds, there fore, with tokens of the prevalence of Hinduism. Lean and wild-looking fakeers, clad in the skins of wild animals, meet one at every street corner, and fat, saucy, and mischievous Brahmany bulls parade the bazaars with insouciant swagger, helping themselves without stint or hindrance to whatever they fancy. Fighting rams are led about, the combats of which are a favourite pastime of the Mahrattas. Temples of all shapes, painted all over with grotesque gods of all forms and colour the visitor comes upon at every turn. The general aspect of the place is squalid, for there is much poverty and many ruins; but here and there, among the huts and slums, rise the massive gloomy walls of the fortress-residences of the old Mahratta nobles; square, sullen keeps, mostly with but one low-browed entrance, and a vista within of cramped, dingy, noisome courts. In the principal bazaar are remains of the palace, or rather castle, of the Peishwa, which must have been a place of no small strength. The mouldering, hoary walls could tell some tales of a fierce and bloody past, for the place reeks again with ghastly associations. From the terrace above its doorway, on an October morning in 1795, there flung himself, in a tempest of jealous wrath, the young Peishwa Mahadeo Rao. Three days previously, on the festival of the Dasahra, he had from the same spot reviewed his troops who defiled before him, a long torrent of fiery horsemen. In the evening he had held a Court, and all seemed to go well with the lad; but the restraints put upon him by his dewan, Nana Farnavis, were too irksome to be borne, and three days after he made away with himself. In the palace, too, of which these are the ruins, in August, 1773, Narayan Rao, at the age of eighteen, after he had been Peishwa but nine months, was savagely murdered by two of his body-guard. The story has the true Eastern ring of blood and treachery in its details. The lad had confined his uncle, Ragunath Rao, in one of the prisons of the palace, and Ragunath had instigated these two bravos to seize the young Peishwa, and thus effect his own release. But Ananda Bai, the relentless wife of Ragunath, secretly altered the instructions to "seize" into instructions to "slay;" and in bloodthirsty obedience to the mandate the assassins forced their victim even from his uncle's arms, to which he had fled for refuge, and stabbed him dead, killing with the same blow a faithful servant who had cast himself upon his master's prostrate form. Close by the ruins of the palace is a street wherein, while the Peishwa reigned, men were executed by being trampled to death by elephants. One of the most memorable of these executions, by reason of the princely rank of the sufferer, was that of Wittoji Holkar, brother of that Jeswant Rao Holkar, who the same year won the battle of Puna. The last of the Peishwas, Baji Rao, beheld the agonies of the victim from the window of his palace, where, on the morning of the 1st April, 1800, he took his seat with his favourite Balaji Kunjar to gloat his lust for blood with the revolting sight. Verily, there can be few people in India who in their hearts sigh for the "good old times."—Daily News Correspondent.

THE NEW BISHOP OF COLOMBO.—On Thursday the newly consecrated Bishop of Colombo. (Dr. Copleston) left England for his new diocese, with a lay and a clerical party, in the Duke of Sutherland, one of Mr. Green's ships, which has for some time past been fitting out in the West India Docks.

COLONEL OWEN WILLIAMS, Royal Horse Guards (Blue), now with the Prince of Wales in India, will, it is stated, remain in Egypt on the passage home for the purpose of organising and developing the Egyptian cavalry. He will probably be there for some months.

FATAL CASUALTY AT SEA.—Struck heavily amidships by a Norwegian barque on Friday morning, the steamer Dante, which left the Mersey for Bombay on Wednesday, sank within seven minutes, with a loss of twenty-two lives. The Dante was a vessel of 1,743 tons, and, with her cargo, was worth nearly one hundred thousand pounds.

SLAVERY IN INDIA.—Writing to a Sheffield correspondent who had sent him a document copied from the Indian Daily News, purporting to be a circular issued by the Government in 1871, directing the surrender of slaves who claimed British protection within three miles of the shore, Mr. Gladstone says—"I never, to my knowledge, saw or heard of the circular or order to which your enclosure refers."

THE SUEZ CANAL.—Sir William Harcourt, M.P., addressed his constituents at Oxford on Thursday night. Referring to the purchase of the Suez Canal shares, in the course of his lengthy speech, devoted to many topics, Sir Wm. Harcourt observed that he thought the preservation of the route to India depended on the condition of our navy; if it were weak, our purchase of the Suez shares was useless; if it were strong, the purchase appeared to be superfluous.

SCRIP OF THE SUEZ CANAL SHARES.—The Malabar, Indian troopship, which arrived in Portsmouth Harbour on Friday, with the 107th Regiment, from Bombay, brought home the scrip of the Suez Canal shares recently purchased of the Khedive by the English Government. It is enclosed in four strong boxes, and on the arrival of the Malabar an official of the Treasury was in attendance to take charge of it.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC.—The motto of this institution being "Instruction combined with Amusement," it finds a public peculiar to itself. In the course of a long evening of scientific and pictorial entertainments Mr. J. L. King relates "The Progress of Royalty in India," and Mr. George Buckland brings the proceedings to a close with a capital Recital, entitled "Gabriel Grub and the Grim Goblin," being adapted from Dickens's celebrated story in the "Pickwick Papers," by A. R. Phillips.

LAND MORTGAGE BANK OF INDIA.—The half-yearly meeting of the shareholders in the above bank was held on Dec. 29 at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, for the purpose of receiving a report from the directors and transacting the general business of the company. The chair was occupied by Mr. G. R. Boyson. After the motion for the adoption of the report had been put and agreed to, the Chairman moved the following special resolution:—"That Article 59 of the Company's articles of association, which now provides that the board shall have the power to make temporary investment of the Company's funds in the United Kingdom or in India on Government securities, and to authorise the drawing, endorsing, accepting, or purchasing of bills for the remittance of such funds, be altered by providing in lieu thereof that the board shall have the power to make temporary investment of the Company's funds in the United Kingdom or in India or upon Government or any other securities, or by deposits at interest, or in drawing, endorsing, accepting, or purchasing of bills for the remittance of such funds from India to England, and to withdraw such funds from India to England, in any Government or other securities or produce, and in such manner as the board shall from time to time determine." The motion, having been seconded, was unanimously agreed to.

SAVING LIFE AT SEA.—Mr. Arthur E. Barlow, commander of the Peninsula and Oriental Company's steamship Nizam, writes from Suez as follows:—"At a time when all means and appliances for saving life at sea are being so freely discussed, I send you the following account of an incident which occurred on our homeward passage from Calcutta. Should you think it of sufficient interest, and as a means of making known a most useful and simple invention, I shall be glad if you will give it space in your journal:—November, 5, 10.20 P.M., In the Bay of Bengal, the night being dark and stormy and raining heavily, one of the crew fell overboard, the vessel steaming at the time eleven knots an hour. The lifebuoy with Holmes's patent storm signal attached was immediately let go, and the engines stopped and reversed until the vessel was close to the buoy, the signal light attached to which was burning brilliantly. A boat was then lowered and the man picked up, the whole stoppage having only occupied twenty-five minutes. The great merits of Holmes' invention are its simplicity, cheapness, and durability. It consists of a metal case or cylinder about 8in. long by 3in. in diameter, which is fitted to a wooden float 2ft. long by 6in. wide. In each end of the cylinder is a small tube covered with a soft metal cap. When required for use, a hole is punctured in each of these caps, so as to admit the water freely, the action of which ignites the composition within the cylinder, which will burn with a brilliant and steady flame for thirty-five or forty minutes, and can be plainly seen at a distance of three or four miles in ordinary weather. It cannot be extinguished by wind or sea, and can be attached by a piece of stout line to any lifebuoy. I think that all sea-going vessels should be compelled to carry this or some similar apparatus.'.

INDIAN COOLIES IN CAYENNE.—The Committee of the Aborigines' Protection Society lately addressed a communication to the Marquis of Salisbury, complaining of the excessive mortality which exists among the Indian immigrants in French Guiana, and also alleging that Indians are introduced into that colony "because employers are unwilling to pay the market value of Creole labour." Lord George Hamilton, M.P., the Under-Secretary of State for India, in a reply, dated Dec. 24, 1875, states that Mr. Wooldridge, her Majesty's Consul at Cayenne, had drawn up a report which showed the many obstacles, natural and social, which interfered with the healthy and prosperous working of the immigration system in that colony. The Government of India, in addressing the Secretary of State on this report, especially referred to the employment of immigrants on the gold washings, in which industry two-thirds of the imported labourers are employed. The Government "alluded to the absence of proper shelter, food, and clothing for the immigrants, their employment beyond the reach of inspecting authority, and the inadequacy of their pay. The Governor-General of India in Council then asked that the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs might be moved to represent to the French Government that "unless the indispensable conditions to the well-being of the immigrants were fulfilled, the Government of India would be compelled to refuse its sanction to the continuance of immigration to Cayenne." Lord George, in conclusion, says :—"A copy of this despatch was sent to the Foreign-office, with a request that the Earl of Derby would cause representations to be made to the French Government in the sense desired by the Government of India. On the 1st of November the Foreign-office transmitted to the Secretary of State for India in Council a copy of a very strong remonstrance addressed by her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris to the French Minister for Foreign Affairs on the subject. The reply of the French Government is now awaited."

MILITARY ITEMS.—Capt. J. E. Christie, late 42nd Highlanders, and formerly Deputy Governor of H.M. convict prison at Chatham, has been appointed Governor of Edinburgh Prison ; he was for some time adjutant of the Black Watch while the regiment was stationed in India.—The following officers will embark as passengers on board the Indian troopship Euphrates, from Portsmouth, on Jan. 5 :—Paymaster Murphy, 4th Hussars ; Sub-Lieutenants—Gavin and Studd, 15th Hussars ; Burrell, 1-2nd Foot ; Tate, 1-3rd Foot ; Eyre, 1-6th Foot ; Trench and Richardson, 1-8th Foot ; Thruston, 1-4th Foot ; Stuart, 1-17th Foot ; Hutchins, 1-21st Foot ; Retallick, 1-25th Foot ; Barrett, 44th Foot ; Swann, 45th Foot ; Harris, 54th Foot ; Brown and Hannan, 56th Foot ; Clarke and Faulder, 62nd Foot ; Stubbs, 63rd Foot ; Ford, 65th Foot ; Harris, 73rd Foot ; Surgeons Kelsall and Dorman, Army Medical Department ; Mr. Carroll, Sub-Inspector of Army Schools.—The recent decision of the authorities altering the period of foreign service of Cavalry regiments will have the effect of hastening by about three years the return home of the 9th Lancers and the 10th and 13th Hussars, now in India, as well as each of the mounted regiments proceeding to the East henceforth. In addition to the 18th Hussars, now on their passage home, the Cavalry regiments in India will, according to the roster, embark for England at the end of each of the following years respectively, viz., 16th Lancers, 1876 ; 11th Hussars, 1877 ; 4th Hussars, 1878 ; 3rd Hussars, 1879 ; 15th Hussars, 1880 ; 10th Hussars, 1881 ; 13th Hussars, 1882 ; and 9th Lancers, 1883. Of the regiments to go out the 14th Hussars will embark on the 5th of January, taking the place of the 18th, and the following is the order in which those next highest on the list would be sent abroad : 12th Lancers, Carabiniers, 8th Hussars, 17th Lancers, King's Dragoon Guards, Inniskilling Dragoons, 7th Dragoon Guards, &c., the last three for foreign service being two of the late Indian Hussar regiments—20th and 21st—and the 5th Lancers. It may be considered as almost, if not quite, officially settled that the Infantry reliefs for the season of 1876-77 will be effected by the return home of the 1st Battalion 11th, 2nd Battalion 19th, 55th, and 108th Regiments from India, the 1st Battalion 10th and 32nd from the colonies, and the despatch upon foreign service of the 2nd Battalion 11th, 1st Battalion 12th, 2nd Battalion 17th, 27th, 46th and 102nd Regiments, of which the 1st Battalion 12th, 2nd Battalion 17th, 27th, and 46th are now quartered in Ireland, and the 2nd Battalion 11th and 102nd in this country. The destination of each of these outgoing battalions has yet to be arranged, but the probabilities are that the 2nd Battalion 11th, 1st Battalion 12th, and 2nd Battalion 17th will go to India, and the 27th, 46th, and 102nd to the colonies, one in succession to a battalion to be sent on to India, and the other two in relief of the 1st Battalion 10th and 32nd. It is not unlikely that two, if not the whole three, may proceed in the first instance to the Mediterranean. A detachment of Royal Engineers, between fifty and sixty in number, are under orders to leave the School of Military Engineering at Chatham in February, for employment in the Public Works Department in India. The men are now undergoing a special course of instruction in the various schools at head-quarters to qualify them for the duties they will have to perform in India.

THE PIANO-MÉCANIQUE.

DEBAIN Inventor.

A Piano on which any person, although unacquainted with Music, can perform the most difficult and elaborate Compositions with faultless execution and delicacy.

The Piano-Mécanique is actuated by means of planchettes (small boards), into which is pinned the Composition to be performed; and these planchettes are caused to travel on a metal plate which is fitted on the top of the Instrument. This metal plate is pierced in a straight line across its breadth by a series of small openings, up through which project the steel ends of the keys of a miniature keyboard, chromatically arranged. The pins of the planchette, coming in contact with the miniature keyboard, act on the keys in a similar manner as would the fingers of the hand.

The metal pins of the planchette vary in height according to the marks of expression, accent, etc., indicated by the composer, the highest producing the full force of blow from the hammer, and the lowest the most delicate. It will thus be seen that every conceit of the author can be copied, and afterwards mechanically rendered in all its integrity; in fact, execution quite beyond the manual dexterity of the most accomplished performer is, by this system, ensured.

The Piano-Mécanique, when compared with kindred Instruments, presents at once its advantages; notably:—Compositions can be played in their entirety, there being no necessity for mutilation to meet the capacities of the Instrument, nor curtailment to suit the circumference of a barrel; greater facility for selecting the Music to be performed, and its requiring much less space: its faultless execution and complete means of expression; the facility with which any single Composition may be obtained for it, and at small cost; its freedom from derangement, either by excessive use or from the extremes of climate; the advantage of a Seven-Octave Manual for ordinary use.

In proof of the success of the Piano-Mécanique, it may be stated that upwards of 3,000 Compositions, ranging from the simple Ballad or Dance to the difficult Fantasia, Overture, or Grand Symphony, have been arranged for it, and to these, additions are almost daily being made.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, December 20; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, December 18; Calcutta, December 17.

DURING the past week Madras had been in a whirl of excitement owing to the Prince's visit. The people there exulted in the belief that their city "has, and will have, been behind no other place similarly honoured in according to his Royal Highness a right loyal reception." As the Madras Times goes on to say, "the various arrangements made for his reception at considerable expense and labour have been successful; the amusements provided for his Royal Highness have not failed to please; there have been no accidents to mar the joyousness of the occasion; the fears of vaticinators of evil regarding the public health at a time when this city has been abnormally full, both with residents and visitors of all classes from various parts of the Presidency, have not been realised; the weather has been pleasant and enjoyable; in short, everything has up to the present moment gone off without a hitch, and his Royal Highness, who takes his departure from these shores to-day, will doubtless carry away with him most pleasant recollections in connection with his visit to the city of Madras."

AT the meeting of the Viceregal Council on December 14 the Hon. Mr. Hobhouse introduced a Bill for empowering the Calcutta University to grant honorary degrees. The Viceroy was rather surprised to hear that the University, as at present constituted, could not confer degrees without an examination. As it was intended shortly to confer on the Prince of Wales the degree of Doctor of Law, Mr. Hobhouse applied for and obtained a suspension of the rules for the conduct of business, after which his little Bill was at once considered and passed.

AT the same sitting the Presidency Banks Bill was introduced, and referred to a Select Committee. It provides that the capital of the Banks of Bengal and Madras shall be reduced, and the shares be fixed at Rs. 500 instead of Rs. 1,000. Certain restrictions are imposed, and facilities given for extending business, Government reserving the right of inspecting accounts and publishing statements of assets and liabilities. The Banks will continue to be Government bankers.

FROM Lahor we get discouraging accounts of the health of Mián-Mír. The troops of that garrison were suffering severely from the autumnal fever so common in that part of the Panjáb. The hospitals of all the regiments were filled with fever-stricken patients. In the Royal Scots alone the number of sick in hospital was reckoned at 250, and the regiment was so crippled in its non-commissioned ranks that privates were often doing the work of sergeants. The officers of this regiment have also suffered. The Artillery were no better off than the Royal Scots, while the Staff kept the Staff Surgeon's hands completely full of work, suffering as he himself was from the same complaint.

ON his way down to Calcutta Lord Northbrook stopped for two hours on the 15th December at Bankipur to dine and consult the Commissioner of Patna and some of the district officers on the prospects of a new famine in Bahar. Colonel Burn, speaking for the Dharbanga Raj Estate, denied the existence of anything worse than scarcity; and the Collector of Mozaffarpur held the same opinion. The Commissioner, Mr. Metcalfe, affirmed that the sub-division of Sitamarhi and the northern part of Darbhanga were the only tracts likely to feel anything like severe pressure; and he urged that all immediate needs would be sufficiently met by the continuance of Messrs. Geddes and Macdonnell in their present posts of observation.

THE case in which a number of Parsis were charged with assaulting Mr. W. Lee-Warner, the Under-Secretary at Bombay, has at length been finished. Of the three convicted, two are sentenced to one month's imprisonment each, and the third to four months. It will be remembered that Mr. Lee-Warner, having struck a shigram driver with his whip for not keeping to the right side of the road, was assaulted most brutally by twelve or fourteen Parsis, of whom the three convicted were the ringleaders.

FROM Maulmain we learn that the mission for fixing the Karen boundary on the side of Burmah is to be composed of Mr. Hildebrand, Assistant Commissioner of Paphoon, who takes command, Mr. Lloyd, R.E., who will go as surveyor, and Mr. Jameson, superintendent of police, with an Inspector in command of one hundred policemen.

WE have not yet got to the bottom of the recent plot at Rangoon. The Rangoon Gazette would implicate the King of Burmah in the attempt so timely frustrated. According to this paper his agents had been at work for a long while, and Moung-Bwah had been doing his worst for his old master. All the men who have been arrested have distinctive tattoo marks on the back of the neck, and are further known by a certain kind of leaf stuck in their ear. They are said to have confessed their intention to burn down Rangoon, and kill all the European inhabitants. Colonel Ardagh, the Commissioner of Pegu, and one or two more gentlemen were to be specially reserved for torture. What with this affair and the still unexplained murder of Mr. Margary, we cannot but admire his Golden-Footed Majesty's boldness in sending an embassy to meet the Prince of Wales.

IT appears that Bengal has of late been suffering almost as much as the North-Western Provinces from the plague of Dacoity or gang robbery. We learn at any rate that Sir R. Temple has sent a threatening circular to all the Commissioners in Bengal. Dacoity has been increasing in that most civilised province ever since 1870, and his Honour is determined to stand it no longer. If the dacoits were "practised criminals," travelling by road or rail from district to district in pursuit of their livelihood, the failure of the district officers to apprehend them might to a certain extent be excused. But it seems that they are only "local bad characters," who try their hand at dacoity when other business is slack. It is therefore unendurable that robberies should occur so frequently before the very eyes of a selected and well-paid body of police superintendents. "I am to say," writes Mr. Mangles, "that if in futnre the crime continues to be of frequent occurrence in any district, his Honour is resolved to hold the District Magistrate and District Superintendent responsible in the matter, and to place them on their defence." Sir Richard proceeds to show that dacoity might be suppressed by rewarding convicted criminals for exposing their fellow-robbers; by offering the country people rewards for giving such information as would lead to the detection of a criminal or the breaking up of a gang; and, above all, by watching and reporting on the movements of known bad characters. Not content with waiting for the next annual administration report on the Police department, his Honour expects the Magistrates and Superintendents to give an unvarnished account of themselves at the end of the cold season.

ON the 1st January, as the Prince of Wales was returning to Government House, after the investiture of the Knights of the Star of India, a native rushed through the guard and police towards the carriage. Captain Davidson, the officer on duty, rode to cut him down. Major-General Probyn, in the carriage, could have thrown him under the wheels; but both saw he meant no mischief. The Prince's quick eye perceived that he only held a paper in both hands, and his Royal Highness was not at all perturbed. It was only a petition, which the man desired to present. The natives have an idea that if they can give a petition into the ruler's hands, redress of their grievances is certain; but it is deemed necessary to take precautions against evil intentions, and the difficulty is to draw a line between excessive caution and rash confidence.

IN the morning of January 3 the Prince of Wales visited the General Hospital and witnessed some further snake-poison experiments under the superintendence of Dr. Fayrer. At half-past four that afternoon a Convocation of the University assembled to confer the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws upon his Royal Highness, this being the first honorary degree which the University has granted. The Prince was met at the entrance to the building by the Viceroy and the Chancellor, the Vice-Chancellor, and a Syndicate of the Fellows of the University, and the members of his staff. He was then conducted, amid much cheering, to the dais which had been erected, and the Vice-Chancellor having in a brief address presented the Prince to the Chancellor, the latter delivered the diploma to his Royal Highness, who then signed the register. The Convocation afterwards closed, and left the hall in procession. A large assemblage gathered, consisting chiefly of graduates and Fellows of the University. Near the dais were numerous chiefs, high officers of the Government, and the members of the Prince of Wales's and Viceroy's staffs. The Prince, accompanied by the members of his suite, left for Bankipur at ten o'clock the same evening by a special train composed of splendidly fitted-up carriages, built expressly for the use of the Royal party, All the native princes attended at Government House to take leave of the Prince. The civil and military officers assembled at the railway, where the Viceroy took leave of his Royal Highness. Troops lined the route to the railway-station, and the bridge was brilliantly illuminated. Before leaving Government House the Prince conferred the honour of knighthood upon Mr. Stuart Hogg, Commissioner of Police, in recognition of his services during the Royal visit.

ON the morning of the 4th his Royal Highness reached Bankipur. At the station he was met by Sir R. Temple and his Staff, Mr. Metcalfe, Colonel Brown, and a guard of honour. The Railway Volunteers and the Cavalry Volunteers, raised from among the planters, were drawn up outside. The road to the camp, more than a mile in length, was bordered by coloured streamers flying from scarlet poles. Great crowds of natives mingled with troops and police lined the road to the camp. A number of elephants were also brought together. After entering the Darbar tent, the approaches to which were lined by detachments of the 109th Regiment and the 40th Native Infantry, the Prince stood on a dais, under a beautiful canopy, Sir R. Temple standing close beside him. Mr. Metcalfe presented many of the Famine officials who had been engaged in distributing food during the Famine period, together with Native Chiefs and Europeans. After the levée the Prince inspected the presents from the Chiefs, which were laid out in another tent. Thence he withdrew to a breakfast, to which many European ladies and gentlemen had been invited. After the breakfast came a procession of nearly 400 elephants, magnificently caparisoned, belonging to various chiefs, four deep. The Prince lunched at Baxar, and arrived at Benares at 5.30 P.M. Owing to rumours of an outbreak of cholera one regiment had been sent away.

ON the 5th, after a levée and reception of the Delhi Princes, and the reading of various addresses at the Head-quarters camp, the Prince drove to an exhibition of the principal manufactures of Benares and a cattle show, comprising 10,000 head of various breeds. In the afternoon his Royal Highness paid a visit to the Maharajah of Vizianagram, and was conducted by him to the Town-hall, which the Prince opened. After laying the foundation-stone of the new subscription Hospital the Prince visited the Monkey and Golden Temples. The chief event of the day was the visit paid by his Royal Highness to the Rajah of Benares, at his splendid castle of Ramnagar, two miles up the right bank of the Ganges. The Prince landed at the Ghat, and was carried in a tonjon through files of soldiers mounted on horses, elephants, and camels. In the outer court of the Rajah's Castle there was a grand show of horses and elephants, and in the inner court a military parade. The Prince talked with the Rajah, and accepted from him an ivory model of the castle, and other gifts. Afterwards the Prince and Rajah ascended to the roof of the castle, whence they had a view of the illuminated city two miles away. The entire length of the city for three miles was brilliantly and uniformly illuminated, and as the town rises in tiers to a great height, the effect was the most splendid yet witnessed. A procession of barges left the castle at seven, and threaded its way through the floating lights on the river, on both banks of which there was a beautiful display of fireworks. "The river"—says the Times Correspondent—"was flecked, as it were, with fire, and every minaret and mosque and line of masonry in the temples was marked out in light. Myriads of people, whose figures were set in blackness against the vivid sheets of flame, presented almost a demoniacal aspect." The magnificent display evoked frequent cries of delight from the Prince, who was met by Sir John and Lady Strachey and family at Ramnagar. Thence they drove to the camp to dinner, a distance of nearly six miles; but all the road was brilliantly illuminated.

THE Prince arrived at Lucknow on the evening of January 6, and went straight to Government House, the people everywhere greeting him with every mark of cordiality and respect. Certain faithful Princes of the Oudh Royal family were presented to him next day, the 7th, at the Banks Bungalow, after which came a levée of Europeans. The Prince received in mufti, quite privately. The Duke of Sutherland, Sir George Couper, Major-General Probyn, Dr. Fayrer, Lord C. Beresford, Colonel A. Ellis, Lord Carington, and others, visited the ruins of Dilkhusha, and went all over the Martiniere, and studied from the tower the ground of Clyde's operations. The country, however, is much changed, and the old villages are all gone. His Royal Highness then paid a visit to the old Residency, entering through the Baillie guard, and traversing the whole building. He then laid the foundation-stone of the Northbrook Monument, erected in the grounds to the native soldiers who fell in the defence of the Residency. An address was read; and the Prince replied most feelingly, highly eulogising the bravery of the slain, and dwelling upon the value of such a monument as an incentive to fidelity. A large number of veterans who fought against the rebels were then presented to his Royal Highness, who was deeply interested in the scene. The sight was most touching as the old warriors filed past, barely able to walk, yet still wearing their battered uniforms and decorations. The whole garrison were present at this touching ceremony. A State dinner was given the same night, and afterwards the Prince went to the Kaisarbagh, which was brilliantly illuminated. His Royal Highness then received an address from the Talukdars of Oudh, and a jewelled head-piece, in return for which he made the usual compliments. This was followed by a display of fireworks.

ON Saturday, the 8th, the Prince, accompanied by the Duke of Sutherland, Lord Suffield, Lord Carington, Major-General Probyn, Colonel Ellis, Captain Williams, Lord C. Beresford, Captain Sartorius, Mr. F. Knollys, and others, left Lucknow at eight A.M. for Onao Station, once the scene of Havelock's fights with the Rebels. After breakfasting at the camp, five miles distant, they mounted horses and proceeded to beat the coarse high grass with a line of thirty elephants and horsemen extended on the flank. Soon boars and sows broke cover, affording good runs, but on most dangerous ground, owing to the holes hidden by grass up to the horses' bellies. The pigs, as Indians will call wild boars, showed great courage, fighting fiercely and charging savagely. In one run a boar "kinked," as it is called, turning sharp and running right under the horse ridden by Lord Carington, which came down heavily. The boar was pursued and killed. It was found that Lord Carington's left collar bone was broken. Fortunately Dr. Fayrer was on an elephant close at hand with appliances, and the bone was set at once. By one o'clock several boars had been killed, some of which inflicted considerable injuries on the horses, and made gallant onslaughts against the riders. There were many falls, but none serious. The Prince, mounted on a fine English hunter, rode admirably; but an English horse has little chance with the boar in such a country, as the latter turns like a hare. Lord Carington was placed comfortably in a dooly or litter and carried to camp, where two ladies kindly attended him. After luncheon sport was continued, the pigs being numerous. Several sportsmen got falls again, and Lord Suffield was slightly hurt with the butt of his own spear in the throat. Eight pigs were killed in all. Returning to Lucknow, the Prince dined at Sir George Couper's. A pretty ball was given by the club of the English community in the beautiful rooms of the Chattar Manzil.

ON Sunday afternoon the Prince with some of his party drove quietly to the ruins of the Residency, and went over every room in it. He also visited the cemetery, where rest the bones of Sir Henry Lawrence and others who died during the siege. He thence proceeded along the wide avenue by the river-side to the iron bridge which Lawrence crossed after the defeat at Chin-hat, and which Outram passed in his attack on the rebellious city. He afterwards went to the Alambagh, where he examined Havelock's monument, returning by dark to Government House.

AT Lucknow a telegram has just been received announcing that Lord Napier of Magdala had broken his collar-bone by a fall from his horse, but it is hoped that he will be able to meet the Prince at Delhi on Tuesday on horseback.

H.M.S. Doris, Narcissus, Immortalité, and Topaze sailed yesterday from Calcutta.

ACCORDING to official advices of January 7 from Penang, Brigadier-General Ross proceeded on the 4th to disarm Kota Lama, a disaffected village and nest of robbers, situated on both banks of the River Perak, two miles above Qualla Kangsa, with 100 men of the 3rd Buffs, 45 Ghurkhas, 12 Artillerymen, and 29 Blue-jackets. The work of disarming on the right bank was effected without opposition. Our troops on left bank marched through the village unopposed under Lieutenant-Colonel Cox, who thereon sent word to Ross that the village was deserted. No sooner had the General disembarked near the centre of the village with his staff and a small escort, than a body of Malays with muskets and spears surprised and nearly surrounded his small isolated party, killing Major Hawkins, two sailors, and one Ghurkha, and wounding Surgeon Townsend and two Ghurkhas. Erelong the Malays were beaten off, and the village on the left bank completely destroyed. The force then returned to Qualla Kangsa. In the States about Malacca our combined force marched through the country of hostile chiefs who have fled, the houses and campongs of the rebels were burnt, and the people are returning to their homes. Our force is now quartered in Sunji Ujong and Malacca. The Governor of the Straits Settlements has just returned from Perak, and will now proceed to Malacca to settle affairs.

THE Bank of Bengal has just declared a dividend for the half-year at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, after adding one lakh to the reserve fund. The Bank has increased its rate of discount for bills under thirty days from 5½ to 6½ per cent., and for bills over thirty days from 6½ to 7½ per cent.

ACCORDING to latest news from Khojand it is confirmed that large bands of insurgent Turkmans are assembling near Andijan, whose numbers are estimated at 25,000. The neighbourhood of Andijan is expected to be the chief theatre of war. The town has been fortified by entrenchments, and will offer a strenuous resistance if attacked.

LITTLE has been heard lately of the Dutch war in Achin. From a despatch, however, dated December 26, which has been received at the Hague, we learn that military operations have been resumed, and a Dutch column has, with slight loss, taken the position of Mibouw, which was held by the Achinese. Two other columns are continuing the movement. The losses of the enemy have been considerable.

THE Rao of Kutch, whose death has just been telegraphed, had only lately returned home from his visit to the Prince of Wales at Bombay. Rao Pragmul succeeded his father, Rao Daisul, in 1860, and died at the age of 56. He came of the Jhareja family of Rajputs, who emigrated from Sind in the fifteenth century, and became rulers of a State 170 miles long by 50 broad, now peopled by about half a million souls. One Rao of Kutch who had promised to aid us in suppressing piracy did so much to encourage it that in 1816 the British Government brought him to account, and three years later for fresh misdeeds on his part he was dethroned. His son Daisul, then an infant, was placed on the Gadi in 1834. One of his first acts was the abolition of the slave trade. The late Rao appears to have trodden faithfully in his father's steps, founding many schools, suppressing infanticide, discouraging crime, improving his revenue, and working loyally with Sir Bartle Frere for the suppression of his subjects' share in the slave-trade at Zanzibar.

THE following announcement, issued from the India Office a few days ago, speaks for itself:—"At the close of last summer Lord Northbrook intimated that he did not feel able to sustain the heavy labours of his office during another summer in India. He will therefore be relieved in the course of the spring by Lord Lytton, now her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon. Her Majesty has been pleased to confer an Earldom on Lord Northbrook, in recognition of his distinguished services.'

THE Viceroy to be is son of the eminent novelist and statesman who held office as Secretary for the Colonies in the second Administration of the late Lord Derby, and was made a peer in the summer of 1866. The present holder of the title was born in 1831, and entered the diplomatic service before he was eighteen years old as attaché at Washington, where his uncle, Sir Henry Bulwer, was the British Minister. In 1852 he was transferred to Florence, and in 1854 to the Embassy at Paris. After the peace of 1856 he was promoted to be paid attaché at the Hague. In 1858 he went as first attaché to St. Petersburg, and two months later was filling a similar post at Constantinople. Whilst serving at Vienna he was employed on a special mission to prevent the renewal of hostilities between the Turks and the Servians after the capital of the latter had been bombarded. In reward for this service he was gazetted Second Secretary in 1862, and soon after rose to be Secretary of Legation at Copenhagen, then at Athens, and afterwards at Lisbon. Having helped to negotiate a commercial treaty between Great Britain and Austria, he was transferred to Madrid, and six months later was promoted to the Secretaryship of Embassy at Vienna. More recently he has been Secretary of Embassy at Paris, and British Minister at Lisbon.

AS a poet Lord Lytton first came before the public in 1855, when his "Clytemnestra and other Poems" won deserved praise from the critics. His second volume, "The Wanderer," published in 1859, revealed the versatility and weird grace of his poetic fancies. "Lucile," his next volume, was more of a clever plagiarism than an original poem; but his "Chronicles and Characters," and his still later "Fables in Song," betokened the steady ripening of his artistic powers. If he should have time to spare for such work, Lord Lytton may yet follow Heber's example, and do poetical justice to the land he is about to rule over.

THE selection of Major-general Sir Alfred Wilde, K.C.B., to fill the vacant seat in the Council of India will strengthen the military element in the Council at a time when it most needs strengthening, while the appointment will doubtless gratify the service of which he is so distinguished a member. Entering the Madras Army in 1838, Sir Alfred served in 1843 against the Moplah insurgents in Malabar. In 1851 he commanded the 4th Punjab Infantry in the campaign against the Bahadur Khail Afghans. In command of the same regiment he served at the siege and storm of Delhi in 1857, and took part in many subsequent fights and sieges of the Mutiny Campaigns, including the final capture of Lucknow by Sir Colin Campbell in March 1858. Two years later he led his Punjabis against the Masud Waziris. In 1868 he commanded as Brigadier-general the field force sent to punish the tribes of the Black Mountain for their raid into British ground. For this last service he was rewarded with a knighthood, and soon afterwards he became Military Secretary to the Madras Government.

FEW members of the Indian Civil Service have risen so high in so short a time, or been cut off in their flower at so early an age, as the late J. W. S. Wyllie, son of a distinguished officer in the Bombay Army, and author of some memorable essays in the Edinburgh Review and the Fortnightly on the Foreign Policy of Lord Lawrence. Those essays, in which he so ably defended the "masterly inactivity" of his erewhile Chief, have now reappeared along with a few others written in India, in one volume published by Messrs. Smith and Elder, under the able editing of Mr. W. Hunter, who has prefixed to them a short but interesting memoir of the lamented writer. In putting these papers together, with the addition of a few explanatory or corrective notes, Mr. Hunter has done a service not only to the memory of Lord Lawrence's able young Foreign Secretary, but to all who take an intelligent interest in the politics of India and Central Asia. The essays on Indian Foreign Policy, with some few exceptions, are as instructive now as when they were first written, and the views expounded by Mr. Wyllie in 1867 still furnish the best answer to the pleadings of Russophobists of every shade. One of his latest official Notes — on "The Rao of Kutch and his kindred"—is followed by a well-informed and picturesque essay on "Káthiawár and the Wághars," written for the Calcutta Review of December, 1860, when its author was only twenty-five years old. Four years before he had given up his Trinity Scholarship at Oxford to win one of the first competitive appointments to the Civil Service of Bombay. In 1860 he joined the Oudh Commission, and in 1862 won his way into the Calcutta Secretariat, rising in a few years to the post of acting Foreign Secretary to the Indian Government. In 1870, not long after his retirement from the service, he died at the age of thirty-four, "with the plans of usefulness he had laid out for the future unfulfilled," leaving behind him the memory of one "who, at each stage of his career, was felt by his fellows to be their foremost man."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, January 10, 1876.

LORD NORTHBROOK AND HIS SUCCESSOR.

THE rumours which for months past have been going about touching Lord Northbrook's early retirement from his post have at length been verified by the official voice. It is quite true that the Viceroy is about to return home on the very plea long since ascribed to him. We now know that towards the close of last summer his Lordship "intimated that he did not feel able to sustain the heavy labours of his office during another summer in India." He is therefore coming home in the spring as Earl of Northbrook, and his place will be taken by Lord Lytton, the British Minister at Lisbon. The only part of this announcement which at all surprises us refers to the choice of Lord Northbrook's successor. That the choice has not been hastily made may be inferred from what happened some months ago, when Lord Lytton was offered and refused the post of Governor of Madras in the room of the late Lord Hobart. It must therefore be assumed that Mr. Disraeli saw good reasons for a selection whose fitness we outsiders must be contented to take on trust. As a poet and a diplomatist indeed Lord Lytton has made his mark. The author of "Clytemnestra," "Lucile," and "The Wanderer," has given proof of fine poetic gifts, some of which may serve him well in the government of his fellow-creatures; and the diplomatic training which began in 1849, when he was still a boy, has certainly brought him into very instructive contact with almost every Court in Europe. Himself the son of a statesman and a man of letters, Lord Lytton must anyhow have gained a considerable knowledge of men and manners, at least in a certain class; a knowledge which may avail him much in dealing with the princes and nobles of India, or in handling questions of foreign policy. His Viceregal Minutes will have all the clearness of statement and grace of style which are said to characterise his Reports. Still, there is a difference between such training and that of so many former Viceroys who qualified for their high place by a more or less varied round of administrative work. That Lord Northbrook for instance had administrative abilities of a high order, was a fact already patent before he went out to India. It is obvious that in some important respects the headship of a State Department should be a better school for viceregal office than even the successful conduct of a British Embassy. The one set of duties would at any rate develop stronger habits of command and self-reliance than the other. The issue alone will show how much of real governing talent Lord Lytton combines with the qualities of his birth and training. Meanwhile we can only say with the Saturday Review, that "the real reason to suppose Lord Lytton fit is that Mr. Disraeli has thought him fit. Mr. Disraeli has gone out of his way to choose Lord Lytton, and it may be assumed that Mr. Disraeli has not gone out of his way without good grounds."

It is just matter for regret that ill-health should have hastened Lord Northbrook's retirement a year before his regular term had run out. But it is better that he should come home betimes, with a fair prospect of gaining fresh distinction in the field of his earlier labours, than that he should linger on at his post to share the fate of Dalhousie or Canning. The four years of his rule, however quiet and, with one exception, free from extraordinary pressure, have done much to justify his selection for the post left suddenly vacant by Lord Mayo's death. Bringing to his work a ripe and varied experience, a sound financial training, some special knowledge of Indian affairs, a clear head, great industry, self-reliance, and strength of will, he soon won his way to the respect and confidence of his Indian subjects, while two successive Secretaries of State have borne willing testimony to the general merits of his rule. From the first he laboured hard to gain a thorough insight into the details of Indian administration, and his very first year of office was devoted to a careful tour of inspection through nearly all Upper and Western India. His first Budget sealed the fate of that odious income-tax which Lord Mayo himself had found unsuited to Indian requirements. Lord Northbrook's conduct throughout the famine which darkened the second year of his rule attested at once his readiness to expend himself at the call of duty, and the firmness with which he held to his own line of policy in spite of popular clamour and the remonstrances of his ablest subordinate. Under the heavy strain upon all his energies involved in the successful grappling with that prolonged crisis, his health began to give way; and the cares and worries of the past year, especially in the matter of the Baroda Trial and the Burmese difficulty, must have aggravated the effect of former sufferings. His mode of dealing with the late Gaikwar exposed him to much unfriendly criticism, which ought rather to have been directed elsewhere. His own Minutes on the subject clearly showed what he aimed at doing and what, but for overruling influences, he would have done. His management of the finances has been remarkably successful in spite of the heavy pressure caused by the Bengal Famine. His failing health has not prevented him from making the best possible arrangements for the visit of the Prince of Wales, or from paying a series of farewell visits to the Native Princes in Rajputana and Central India. In his foreign policy he has shown himself discreet and watchful, ready enough to act at need, but slow to interfere without due cause. With regard to the Native Feudatories, his dealings with Haidarabad are involved in some mystery, and it is probable that his influence in other quarters lacks the strong personal charm wielded by his more genial predecessor. On the whole however it must, we think, be admitted that India under Lord Northbrook has not been less happy or worse governed than India under Lord Mayo.

THE BENGAL SALT-TAX.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

In Lower Bengal salt used to be manufactured and sold by the officers of Government, the sum charged being the cost price added to a fixed rate of duty, which in 1856-57 was Rs.2½ a maund.

* * * * * *

The Customs duty on importation was Rs.2½ per maund from 1849 to 1859, Rs.3 from 1859 to 1861, and Rs.3¼ since March, 1861.—"New Blue-book," pages 38 and 39.

SIR,—In Bengal, from the year 1793 to 1836, the Government monopoly of salt was, I understand, sold by public auction; there were no fixed rates of tax on salt, as there have been since 1836. The purchasers at auction, in order to enrich themselves, would naturally run up the retail prices of salt, especially in a province where smuggling could seldom hope to escape detection, and where illicit manufacture is in many places impossible; if in 1814 the people of Eastern Bengal were in a poor and miserable condition, and the prices of pure salt were unnaturally high, it is easy to understand how cholera could be generated and propagated.

In 1829 an extra tax of one rupee a maund was imposed upon salt passing Allahabad to the Eastward, chiefly for the purpose of protecting the Bengal monopoly (see Trevelyan's Customs Report, page 93). The principle of the Bengal Salt-tax appears ever to have been to raise as much revenue as possible, without any consideration for the effect which would be produced on the health of the poor by dear adulterated salt.

But let us do justice to the memories of Lords Hardinge and Dalhousie. From 1844 to 1857 the Bengal Salt-tax was gradually reduced from Rs. 3.4 to Rs. 2.8 a maund; this fact is most honourable to Lord Hardinge, because he had to face great financial difficulties, caused by the enormous expenses of a desperate Sikh war.

The net revenue for Bengal in six years from 1813 appears to have been as follows:—1813-14, Rs. 1,21,96,084; 1814-15, 1,01,87,767; 1815-16, 88,34,568; 1816-17, 96,57,251; 1817-18, 1,04,66,030; 1818-19, 1,11,42,639.

In 1819-20 salt was first imported into Bengal, and the revenue rapidly rose, until in 1822-23 it reached the sum of Rs. 1,53,47,049.

The returns show that in 1814 the quantity of salt consumed in Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, amounted to 4,463,500 maunds, about one-half of what ought to be annually consumed by the present population; but under a system of selling the right of taxation by public auction, it must be very difficult to ascertain the actual consumption; the auction purchaser's accounts are usually accepted with very little scrutiny.

In 1859 the Bengal Salt-tax was raised to Rs. 3 a maund, and in 1861 it was again increased to Rs. 3-4 a maund.

With reference to the history of the Tax in the Upper Provinces, I strongly recommend the careful study of Mr. Braddon's Salt Report for Oudh (written, I think, in 1866 or 1867).

It is the best and fullest which I have seen on this question since the Mutiny.

CATTLE DISEASE.

The Reports on the terrible cattle disease in Oudh in 1867 prove clearly that it was caused by want of salt. I would call particular attention to the official reports by medical officers of Government (see Allen's Indian Mail, March 3, 1871).

In order to ascertain whether any connection exists between the prevalence of cholera and the high prices of salt, it is necessary—

1st. To call for information regarding the measures which have been adopted by Government for redeeming the promises made by the British Commissioners at Constantinople in 1866.

2ndly. To ascertain the retail prices of pure salt (unadulterated with sulphate of soda, magnesia, lime, and mud) in the markets throughout the Province of Bengal, during the years 1814 to 1819, and from 1860 to 1874.

It must be remembered that the construction of railroads has greatly reduced the expense of transporting salt (see Allen's Indian Mail of the 26th September, 1871).

The highest priced salt sold in the Bengal bazaars is the Punjab rock salt, called Lahori, which is greatly appreciated by rich natives. I do not ask that the price of this expensive salt should be entered in our calculations; but I wish to learn the prices of the second class pure salt in order to ascertain whether it has ever been within the reach of the poor. The price of Cheshire salt is calculated at 10s. a ton at Liverpool, at £1 7s. at Calcutta, and it sometimes costs, I believe, as much as £21 a ton in the interior of the country.

Dr. W. B. O'Shaughnessy, formerly Professor of Chemistry in the Medical College of Calcutta, in his work on Chemistry, published in 1837, pointed out that in his days deleterious magnesia and lime were found even in the best kinds of salt sold in the bazaars. In page 223 he wrote:—

> The mixture, however, sold as salt in the Bengal bazaars contains almost all the ingredients of sea-water, with the addition of sand and mud. It can only be the all-preservative effect of habit that enables the poor natives to use this compound with impunity.

3rdly. To ascertain and compare the mortality from cholera in the districts east of the great Government hedge and in the districts west of it.

The Government hedge, partly green and partly dry, extends from the Bhawulpoor territory (see page 7 of Blue-book) through Hissar to Delhi, and thence to Agra; from Agra it is taken through Jhansi and Saugor across the Nebuddah river to Nursingpoor, and thence to the Sautpoorah mountains, on the road between Jubulpoor and Seoni (see para. 141 of Sir Richard Temple's Report for the Central Provinces, for 1862-63).

I believe that it will be found that epidemic cholera is seldom known West of the Government Customs hedge wherever the poor inhabitants may be able to consume plenty of cheap salt.

4thly. It is desirable to obtain, if possible, true Returns regarding the consumption of salt per head in districts where epidemic cholera appears to have been generated. Mr. De Vere, the excellent customs officer at Agra, pointed out that men never voluntarily eat too much salt. Men, as well as children, may consume too much sugar for their health, but they care not to eat more salt than is good for them. The same may be said of cattle; they will not touch salt unless it be good for their health. If, therefore, the consumption of salt decreases in any place, we may be assured that disease will ensue.

All of the official guesses at the rate of consumption per head have hitherto been unreliable. Government used to calculate the population of the Bengal Presidency at forty millions. When to its amazement three years ago it discovered that it amounted to sixty-six millions all its calculations of salt consumption per head were upset (see Allen's Indian Mail of Nov. 25, 1872).

Epidemic Cholera is said to have originated in Eastern Bengal in 1817. This agrees, I believe, very nearly with the evidence produced before the Constantinople Commission in 1866, and with tradition among the native community in various parts of India.

When once the choleraic air has been generated, atmospheric disturbances are sufficient to cause it to spread even to places where sanitary arrangements are excellent, and to persons who are believed to be in a healthy state of body, and are not in want of any of the comforts of life.

If cholera be caused by extreme poverty, coupled with want of salt, it would be more likely to be generated in Bengal than in any other part of India; for in Bengal it is very difficult to obtain untaxed salt, while in the North-West Provinces it is very easy to procure it. All the efforts of the excisemen, of the police, and of the magistrates in the North-West Provinces and Oudh, have been ineffectual to prevent the old women from going out at night and returning with several pounds weight of salt earth, which is put into water; the earth sinks, and the saline water untaxed is drank off with great satisfaction and good sanitary results.

Sir Charles Trevelyan in his famous Customs Report, dated 1st January, 1834, has shown very clearly how difficult it is to consume untaxed salt in Bengal. In page 107 he calculated that the quantity of salt which yielded revenue to Government in Bengal and Behar exceeded that which paid duty in the North-West Provinces in the proportion of more than 48 to 15.

One reason for thinking that want of salt may predispose the body to yield to the attacks of cholera is pointed out by Dr. O'Shaughnessy in page 435 of his work above alluded to. Lecanu made a careful analysis of the several constituents of the human blood, for which he obtained the gold medal of the French Academy. On comparing his analysis with the analysis of the serum from cholera patients, Dr. O'Shaughnessy discovered in the latter a great deficiency of saline materials.

Lord Lawrence's evidence in 1873 before the Committee of the House of Commons proved that the present excessive rate of taxation is alike impolitic, oppressive, and detrimental to the interests of agriculture. The Government of Madras has proved that whenever the tax is raised above £5 a ton, the consumption of salt decreases.—Your obedient servant, T.

IRRIGATION IN THE BENGAL PRESIDENCY.—III.

The desirableness of undertaking canals where, without them, cultivation would not exist at all, or would be of much less extent, is not, however, merely a commercial question. For instance, close the irrigation of the Upper Sutlej series because of its commercial unprofitableness, and—as the rainfall in the tract irrigated thereby is under ten inches per annum, and none of the soils therein are of a class on which such rainfall will nearly suffice to mature a crop, and well-irrigation in that tract, owing to the depth of the water-bearing strata, is scanty—the result would be, according to the opinion of a revenue officer quoted in the Punjab Irrigation Report, that the land revenue of that tract would not be worth the cost of collection. In other words, the people, abandoning agriculture, would revert to their old pastoral pursuits as graziers and cattle-lifters. The Bari Doab Canal is peopling the vast waste of the "Bar," and in so doing is relieving over-populated tracts. The Lower Sutlej and Chinab series irrigates a region in which, the annual rainfall being under six inches, the only cultivation before the introduction of canals was by means of wells. Now a well twenty-five feet deep, furnished with a Persian wheel and worked by three pairs of bullocks and two men, will mature 20 acres of cereals and 2 or 3 acres of tobacco, cotton, indigo, or garden stuff. The same well, liberally helped with canal water during the inundation season, will mature from 100 to 150 acres of crops (the water consumption of one acre of rice has been empirically assumed=2 acres indigo, 3 acres cotton, 6 acres wheat, barley, millet, &c.). This is the measure of extension which Sawun Mull afforded to the cultivation of the Mooltan, Mozufferghur, and Dera Ghazi Khan districts in undertaking the Lower Sutlej and Chinab and the Indus series of canals and those of Mozufferghur.

Evidently there are results here not to be estimated in pounds, shillings, and pence. Extension of cultivation means increase of population, increase in the amount of food supply, enhanced consumption of imposable goods, facilitation of locomotion for commercial and military operations. It means the relief of over-populated tracts, with the accompanying diminution of risk of famine and pestilence, diminution of poverty and distress, diminution of crime. The extension of cultivation in Bera Ghazi Khan has permitted of considerable reduction in the armed bodies that were originally necessary to keep in order the half-starved Biloch tribes of that border—a seething mass of turbulence now settled down in peaceful cultivation on the banks of the canals, and on the utilised irrigation of the mountain torrents. The pastoral tribes of the "Bar," now devoting themselves to agriculture on the Bari Doab Canal, and those of the Upper Sutlej Series, required in 1857 a column from the Lahore garrison to bring them into subjection.

Such, then, being the advantages of canals, where cultivation entirely, or in a great measure depends upon them, it is evidently only necessary to show a modest return—sufficient, say, to defray the cost of the money laid out, or from 4-5 per cent. on the total capital—to justify such undertakings in such localities. On the contrary, the construction of canals in tracts where cultivation is not the least dependent upon them, save under most exceptional circumstances, and is not susceptible of being extended by them, must be justified on purely commercial or philanthropic grounds. Where such are, patently, not profitable speculations, it is their necessity in a philanthropic point of view which must be clearly demonstrated. This is what the Government of India has never yet manfully faced, but continues to include propositions for canals, in whatever locality, in the general category of "Reproductive Works"—to be constructed because reproductive, by raising loans.

Yet it is an undoubted fact, as pointed out by the late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, that outlay on canals in that province is unremunerative expenditure, made in view of the possible contingency of failure of rain and consequent famine. On this head Colonel Chesney remarks ("Indian Polity," p. 427), "Of this country" (Bengal) "rice is the staple food, and ordinarily the rainfall is abundant" (sixty to seventy inches); "but just in proportion to the general prosperity must be the magnitude of the calamity should a failure of the rains occur in so densely populated a country, all dependent upon one description of food gathered in at one season of the year" (there are, however, other harvests in Bengal, though doubtless that of the autumn rice is the principal one). . . . "It would probably, however, turn out to be almost wholly unremunerative" (a proposed Ganges Canal from Rajmehal), "since in most years artificial irrigation is not the least required in this country." Here the issue is clearly stated, and no attempt is made at concealment of the fact that outlay on irrigation for the purpose of preventing famine in Bengal is as much unremunerative expenditure as that made to meet famine when it comes. It is for the Government to show in either case that the expenditure is necessary, that, if necessary, it is made to the best purpose, and that the revenues can support it, all of which positions are controverted in many quarters.

It is asserted, and with much show of reason, that—instead of spending millions upon feeding the people at their own doors, when their rainfall fails them, or in providing them with irrigation, which, nine years out of ten, they will not use, in view of such a possible contingency—all that is required, and all that the Empire can afford, is to provide facilities for their exodus in search of food and work, in the event of failure of rain, after the manner of the rest of India. Also, facilities for the superabundant food supply of other parts to reach the regions affected by the scarcity. Both these remedies are, it is truly stated, comprised in the construction of communications—a class of public works which are in themselves always remunerative, directly or indirectly, if judiciously projected in a populous country. It is asserted, on the experience of the Bengal famine of 1874, that, had proper communications existed through the affected tract, ordinary commercial enterprise would (as, under great difficulties, it to a certain extent did) have poured thereinto the surplus food grains of the surrounding country, and placed ample sustenance within the reach of all who had means to purchase—which means the Government could have sufficiently supplied by opening useful public works. And it is further argued that it cannot be the business of any Government—certainly not of one that makes ends meet with such difficulty as the Government of India, even in ordinary times, and which has such vast military and railway expenditure before it—to undertake to support in their own homes those who will neither take advantage of work nor markets, though within easy reach.

These issues, however, do not directly concern the objects of the present paper. If canal undertakings in Bengal and Orissa are justifiable, it is only in a philanthropic point of view. If in that point of view unnecessary, or if, as before pointed out in the case of the Orissa and Midnapoor Canals, they are likely to fail of their object—then they are not justifiable at all. In either case they are not "Reproductive Works," such as, under the accepted Indian maxim, may be constructed upon loans. In either case they must be excluded from the consideration of canals as commercial speculations, the light in which Lord Salisbury was regarding those undertakings when he declared that they do not pay.

Now in Behar and the valleys of the Ganges and Jumna, canals do, to a greater or less extent, assist cultivation, and it cannot be said here, as in Bengal, that "irrigation is not the least required in this country." Of course with a rainfall of from 30 to 50 inches, and covered as they are with wells, these valleys are not in any way dependent upon canals. Nevertheless, their aid renders the cultivation more certain and of more valuable quality, and, therefore, on political grounds, the construction of canals in those tracts is justifiable; but only if they can make a moderate return upon the outlay. In considering this question the remarks of the eminent engineer who wrote "Indian Polity" are pregnant with warning. "There is one fact to be borne in mind as very material to the point" (the anticipation of profit in Canal undertakings). "There is no possibility of ever again executing a great irrigation work project at anything like the same cheap rate as the Ganges Canal" (net cost, without interest, £2,382,518 for 617 miles of canal and branches irrigating 767,000 acres), "because, not only was that work as remarkable for the economy with which it was carried out as for the excellence of the workmanship, but it was constructed before the recent great rise of prices. It is not too much to say that if the work had to be done again, even under the same skilful and careful engineer, it would cost at least twice as much as the actual outlay has been. The irrigation works already constructed stood, in fact, with the enormous financial advantage of having been carried out in the days of low prices, an advantage not likely to be again available." Nevertheless, the Ganges Canal, when charged with merely simple interest on its outlay, shows a return of only 2·76 per cent. on capital.

It is possible, certainly, that the return upon existing canals may be somewhat increased. Their working expenses could be diminished by transferring the work of distribution and collection to the Revenue Establishment, and confining the Canal Department to the purely scientific duties of construction and maintenance. Again, the Canal Department asserts, though opposed on this point by some Revenue officials, that the price of the water might be profitably enhanced. The Head of that Department in the North-West Provinces considers that the proceeds might attain an average of eight shillings an acre. At present the average return from all sources—water-rate, owner's-rate, water advantage rate or enhanced Land Revenue, is (for permanent canals such as the officer mentioned referred to) about 6s. 6d. an acre, and it can hardly be doubted that cultivators can well afford to pay an average of eight shillings an acre for water in addition to land-tax based upon unirrigated rates. Doubtless also a larger irrigated acreage will be obtained when the irrigation arrangements on the newer canals are developed to the utmost; and when the remedies applied to faulty construction on the Ganges and Bari Doab canals permit of their carrying their full supply of water and thus working up to their full power. The application of this remedy is, however, costly, and the return is hardly likely to be more than the normal interest on the amount thus added to the capital cost.

We will suppose, then, that the Western Jumna Canal might return 5 per cent. on capital, the Eastern Jumna 7 per cent., the Bari Doab Canal 3 per cent., the Ganges Canal 3½ per cent., without charging the cultivators more than an average of 8s. on an acreage, yielding (taking the Bari Doab Canal average as being the most reasonable of the widely different ones shown in the Government returns) £1. 12s. 3d. per acre. This leaves 75 per cent. of the produce, or £1. 4s. 3d. for land revenue, based on unirrigated rates (called the inherent land revenue), rent, expenses of cultivation, and the tenant's maintenance, which is a sufficient allowance. The average return on the four canals, when the price of the water is thus raised to the highest possible rate, becomes about 4½ per cent. upon capital, disregarding compound interest thereon. Double the capital upon Colonel Chesney's estimate of the proportion of cost of future works to those constructed in times past, and we derive a maximum return for the canals of the future of 2¼ per cent. The difference between this return and the 4-5 per cent., which the money laid out upon these canals costs, being carried to their capital debit, and thus increasing it year by year, will, unless the net return can be in some unforeseen way increased, show the percentage of profit upon capital year by year smaller, and the undertakings thus year by year more hopelessly unprofitable.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE VICEROY AND THE NATIVE PRESS.

The Englishman remarks that the story of the Nizam's refusal to come to Bombay, as told by the Pall Mall Gazette, is familiar to most of its readers. If the story as given by the Pall Mall Gazette is true, the Haidarabad ministers simply beat us by our own British weapon of a medical certificate; and the worst feature of the case is that the certificate seems to have been a genuine one. The line of action taken by the Viceroy was wrong both in fact and in form. The natives have learned that the vernacular press no longer reaches the organs of English public opinion in this country, and through them the English public at home. They have, therefore, taken a more direct, and as the Haidarabad case would seem to indicate, a highly successful method of bringing the power of English public opinion to bear against the Viceroy. The appeal perhaps obtained an exceptional significance with the English public from the fact that it followed a somewhat similar appeal by one of the diplomatic officers of the India Government. Our correspondent sometime ago mentioned that Mr. Forsyth had written to the English papers, quoting a letter from his brother, the late Burmese Envoy, regarding the injustice with which he had been treated. That letter stated publicly that the very same day on which he received his instructions at Mandalay those instructions were telegraphed from Simla to one of the Indian papers. Secrecy is the first essential of successful diplomacy, and to the English mind there was doubtless something grotesque in an envoy being expected to carry on a negotiation with his whole hand thus displayed to the public. The impression left by this and other stories of a similar nature in the English papers is not a favourable one. It allows room for a surmise, no doubt an ill-founded surmise, that the Viceroy strengthened his position against the Envoy by taking the public into confidence before the proper time; and that the native Courts are learning to strengthen themselves against the Government by skilfully getting up a good case, as the Haidarabad Ministry did, and then placing the whole at the disposal of some English newspaper. The disadvantages of such a line of action are obvious. In England, the truth might be ascertained, and misstatements dispelled by a question in Parliament. But the Indian Government had no such mechanism for getting the facts authoritatively disclosed. A native Court has only to persuade any Englishman of respectability and some reputation to communicate its case to an English paper, in order to secure the undisputed field of English public opinion for many weeks. Two months must elapse before an article such as that in the Pall Mall Gazette can be answered.

PROMOTION IN THE PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.

The Pioneer believes that the advent of the Cooper's Hill men who came out to India last year will give a small fillip of promotion throughout the junior grades of the Department of Public Works. The rules of that service provide that the proportion of junior and senior assistant engineers shall stand to each other in a certain fixed ratio, so that the importation of fifty assistants in the second class involves the advancement of several who are now in that class to the higher grade. Some of the senior assistants should also be promoted simultaneously to be fourth class executives, under the operation of the same rule, and the tide of promotion may perhaps not be wholly spent till the higher executive grades are reached. The movement will be an opportune one, for of late the stagnation of promotion has been very marked, and, if continued much longer, might seriously affect the efficiency of this branch of the service. But this partial relief does not affect the block in the higher appointments under which the department suffers. This seems to be caused partly by the ill-considered pension rules of the Uncovenanted Service, which render retirements almost impossible till men have ceased to be efficient; but still more by the promiscuous way in which the higher ranks of the department have been recruited of late years by men from outside, who must serve for a great many years longer before they can be entitled to even the lowest rate of pension. This mode of filling up the ranks of the service was, we must suppose, unavoidable. The strength of the department a few years ago was quite unequal to the sudden expansion of work thrown upon it; and when first the Government began to make its own railways it was necessary to import new engineers of experience in railway construction. A close engineering service would always, moreover, be a great evil. But all sudden augmentations of the sort are sure to be followed by a block, than which scarcely anything is more calculated to impair the efficiency of any public service, in all branches of which good men should have a reasonable chance of getting to the front. One partial remedy for this state of things there does appear to be available. Among the engineers imported thus suddenly into the service there were, we believe, some eighty sent out from England by the Secretary of State six or seven years ago, under a temporary engagement for five years. Many of these gentlemen have proved a very valuable acquisition to the service, and the time has come when their case should be considered, with the view of offering them a further extension of their engagement. But this can hardly hold good of all; and the claims of their juniors, who were appointed for a lifelong service, must also be considered. The appointment of these gentlemen for five years was avowedly a temporary measure as a means of carrying on the business of the Government until their own permanent servants should be ready to take up the work. When railway companies complete an undertaking their staff is always reduced or disbanded, and there could be no sort of hardship in carrying out, with respect to a considerable number of the gentlemen in question, the terms of an agreement which it was always understood would be acted on. Another thing that seems strongly called for, is the limitation of the tenures of the higher posts. For healthy circulation throughout a public service, a flow of blood to the top is quite as necessary as an influx of fresh blood at the bottom. In military offices the rule is strictly maintained, and, on the whole, with great advantage; and it is equally necessary in this branch of the service. A few men should not have the monopoly of the best posts for an indefinite time. Yet quite lately two officers were allowed to retain office after succeeding to their off-reckonings. This unusual course might be justified in case of emergency, if the duty to be performed were of a very special kind, and efficient substitutes were not forthcoming. But this plea could not be urged in the present state of the upper ranks of the D. P. W., which are full of experienced officers, offering an abundant field of selection for every class of work. In the army a man has to vacate a brigade command on promotion to general, although he may have been just appointed to it; and it seems quite indefensible that chief and superintending engineers should be retained in the performance of routine duties as general officers, when they have already held those appointments for ten or fifteen years.

SOCIAL RELATIONS OF EUROPEANS AND NATIVES.

The Bombay Gazette remarks that all old Anglo-Indians will remember the time when the natives held us as superior beings to themselves. It was easy to govern them at that time, but times are changed. Now, it is nothing for the Oriental to attack an European with a bludgeon or break his head with a chair, and though equality has its rights the native is somewhat indiscreet in applying them. But, of course, if it is the policy of the Government to degrade the Englishman in the same proportion as it levels up the natives, we can only expect that contempt for the ruling race will be the fruit of it, and greater mutual hatred incited than if natural laws were allowed to work for themselves in the arrangement of relations, social and political, between the two peoples. Of all things there is none we should like better to see than an easy understanding between ourselves and the natives, such as we enjoy among ourselves. There is nothing we should like better to see than the native gentleman and the English gentleman, their prejudices put aside, dining and all the rest of it together; but it appears to us that after due experiment our present policy holds out little hope of such an amalgamation of the races as this implies; and that, unless that policy is altered for something more practical, we are in danger of continuing an error which may either cost us India, or will require to preserve it, an addition to our forces of perhaps another fifty thousand British bayonets. The Englishman is growing poorer, less able to make an Oriental display, more contemned in native eyes, as the native grows richer and more powerful under our sway, and the consequence will probably be that some day or other the Government will discover that in education—as the native mind understands it—they have placed a cudgel for the Kaffir's back instead of a potent instrument of enlightenment for the Aryan. It seems to us that as time goes on, and the amalgamation of the races remains in heart almost as distinct as ever, the one thing we have to look for is the softening and refining influence of women. When the native women of the better classes are emancipated from the tyranny of seclusion, and are enabled to receive some of that education we now so liberally scatter on unproductive soil, we may hope for the beginning of such an era as political visionaries fancy they perceive already. It is impossible to estimate the amount of influence the women of India might bring to bear upon the men, because no eastern country has been sufficiently liberal to try the experiment. Eastern peoples are hard for foreigners to get on with. Their habits, pleasures, and thoughts are not those of peoples accustomed to the refining influences of female society, and in the social slavery of women in Hindoostan we fancy we see one, at least, of the most difficult obstructions which circumstances or fate has placed between ourselves and the Oriental. Would that it were woman's mission in this country to smooth the relations between the Englishman and the Indian. We may boast now as much as we please about the devoted loyalty of the people, and of their affection for Englishmen and English institutions, but it is simply—bunkum. Professions of such things are unreal in the face of the social distinctions between the peoples we speak of. When the Englishman and the Aryan brother can sit down with their respective families at the same table, and their wives cotton as Englishwomen will cotton, then, indeed, we shall believe in what are but theories, at present, and think that the regeneration of India is commencing.

Bengal, Upper India, &c.

THE VICEROY AT JAIPUR.

In replying to the toast of his health, given by the Maharajah of Jaipur, Lord Northbrook said :

Maharajah, Ladies and Gentlemen,—I am sincerely obliged to you for the manner in which you have drunk my health. I beg to acknowledge, on behalf of the Queen, the sentiments of loyalty and devotion to her Majesty which your Highness has expressed, and I shall have great pleasure in conveying them to her Majesty. The Queen will learn with satisfaction the terms which your Highness has used to describe the benefits conferred upon the princes and people of Rajpootana by the British Government as the Paramount Power in India; and I have received her Majesty's commands to omit no opportunity of announcing the sincere friendship which she entertains for the native princes of India, and the deep interest which she feels in their welfare.

Your Highness has alluded to my recent journey through Central India and Rajpootana, and expressed an opinion that much advantage is derived from the visits which are occasionally paid by her Majesty's representatives in India to Native States. For my part I can truly say that my tour has been one of unalloyed interest and gratification.

From the confines of the Presidency of Bombay to the borders of the North-Western Provinces I have passed through the territories of many native States, some of which have, owing to the difficulties of communication, never been visited by my predecessors in the office of Viceroy. I have seen the ruins of ancient cities and fortresses rich in historical associations. I have visited capital cities, such as Oodeypore and Jodhpore, remarkable for the picturesqueness of their situation and the beauty of their buildings, and showing, moreover, signs that their rulers are not unmindful of the requirements of modern civilisation. Among these cities Jeypore has excited my admiration from the grandeur of the designs of your Highness's illustrious ancestor, Jiwan Jey Sing, and from the magnificence with which your Highness yourself has added to the advancement of the city and the comfort of its inhabitants.

I have inspected many institutions founded for the benefit of the people, and among them are conspicuous the college and school of art in which your Highness takes so great an interest, and the hospital which we have assisted to open to-day in honour of Lord Mayo. The higher ranks throughout Central India and Rajpootana shows a great appreciation of the value of a liberal education for their children, many of whom I have seen at the different colleges and schools, and all the Princes whose States I have traversed are hearty in their efforts to further the education of their subjects of all classes.

I have found in Central India and Rajpootana Sir Henry Daly and Mr. Lyall representing the British Government with great ability, and evidently possessing the confidence of the princes with whom they have to deal; while the British Residents at all the States through which I have passed, at Oodeypore, at Johdpore, and here at Jeypore, are on the best terms with the princes near whose course they reside. Throughout the whole country I have traversed peace reigns undisturbed, and there is every sign of the prosperity of the people. Not sixty years since anarchy and rapine rioted over the land. Your Highness has truly said that this peace and prosperity is due, under Providence, to the influence and authority of the British Government, exercised in the true interests of the princes and the people; and I am sure that it is now universally recognised that her Majesty's representatives in India are actuated in their dealings with native States by these considerations alone.

The condition of this part of India must be a just source of satisfaction to every Englishman. For myself I have felt it deeply; and I have everywhere been received as her Majesty's representative with a welcome so hearty that I have found it impossible adequately to convey my acknowledgments.

These are the vivid impressions which I have received during my progress, and which will never be effaced from my memory. I am grateful to your Highness for having, by alluding to the subject, afforded me an opportunity of expressing my feelings upon the present occasion.

I shall take the earliest opportunity of acquainting the Prince of Wales with the manner in which your Highness has alluded to his Royal Highness's expected visit to this city; and I am sure that in no part of India will his Royal Highness receive a more hearty and enthusiastic welcome.

Miscellaneous.

MR. DUFF, Forest officer in Kulu, is about to erect a wire suspension-bridge over the Beas, with 300 feet span, as a momento of his long connection with that district.

MAGISTERIAL.—Mr. Bullen Smith is the Sheriff elect of Calcutta for the coming year. Sir Richard Couch is understood to have recommended Mr. Roberts and Rajenbralala Mitra to be his successor.

DEATH OF MR. KIRBY.—Mr. Thomas Kirby, Head Master of Christ Church School, Cawnpore, was accidentally drowned on the 7th December, whilst bathing in the river Burna, near Benares, where he had gone to spend his Christmas vacation with a friend.

EARTHQUAKES.—An unusually severe earthquake occurred at Lahor, Rawal Pindi and other parts of the Punjab early on Sunday morning, the 12th Dec. It is reported that it has caused considerable damage to public buildings on the frontier. Nowshera cantonment particularly suffered.

POLITICAL GOSSIP.—According to the Calcutta Statesman there has been a split in the Political Department for some months past. Mr. Aitchison goes on furlough (honourable retirement), the Statesman believes, in February, on condition that he comes back as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjaub. It is a wrong to Mr. Aitchison, we are told, to hold him answerable for the astonishing errors of the last year or two. Mr. Aitchison is to go on the principle that "a bad workman always complains of his tools."

JODHPUR.—The elephant procession at Jodhpur, in honour of the Viceroy's arrival on the 29th Nov., was, we hear, one of the best oriental pageants his Excellency has yet seen. In more civilised parts of India there is often a western veneer on displays of this kind, apt to wake up visions of the Lord Mayor's show; but the wild Rajpoots of Jodhpore, living far away in the desert, have been little touched by the hand of the foreigner, and still preserve much of a genuine mediæval character. On the 30th the Viceroy visited the Maharajah's stud, which includes some good horses. With care and scientific treatment this Marwar breed might be a good deal developed. Lord Northbrook was entertained at dinner in the evening by the Maharajah, at a picturesque old castle on a rock; and next day a long drive of 100 miles through sand and scrub brought him to Beawur.

THE NEW ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.—Sir Richard Temple's zoological gardens are so far advanced that he has determined to appoint a committee of management. For the present the gardens will be kept under his immediate charge. A temporary committee of four members, with Lord Ulick Brown as president, will settle all questions of administrative detail, such as the price of admission, the size and cost of the establishment, the food for animals, the acceptance of contributions, and so forth. The establishment and the food it is reckoned will not cost less than Rs. 200 a month, but the amount, of course, will vary with the number of animals. The salary of a director, who will be brought out from Europe, is not included in this charge. All subscriptions and donations should be sent to Mr. C. E. Buckland, C.S., the honorary secretary to the committee.—Pioneer, Dec. 11.

POOR EUROPEANS IN INDIA.—A memorial has been presented to Lord Northbrook, the Governor-General of India, praying him to take measures in Council for the appointment of a special commission to inquire into the destitution which exists among the European and Eurasian working population. The cause of their extreme poverty is found by the memorialists principally in the substitution of native labour in various Presidencies, and the remedies suggested are, first, the creation of new industries, or the development of existing industries, offering a field of employment for European and Eurasian labour; secondly, the establishment of industrial schools, and also the establishment at large centres of industry of industrial homes, together with the amendment of the law relating to European vagrancy; and, lastly, the establishment of colonies on the hill ranges and on the islands in the Bay of Bengal, and the establishment of aided emigration. In conclusion, the memorialists draw the Viceroy's attention to the fact that, consequent upon their great poverty, the classes for whom their appeal is made are compelled to mix with the lowest order of natives, with whom their children come in contact, the result being that immorality and vice are increasing to a serious extent. Such a state of things, the memorialists urge, "lowers the prestige of the British Government in the eyes of the native population."

GWALIOR AND THE PRINCE OF WALES.—Gwalior and Jaipur are vying in their preparations for the reception of the Prince of Wales. Those at Gwalior are on a magnificent scale, we learn. The Maharaja has, as we have already announced, gone to Calcutta, accompanied by his political agent, who met Scindia and his large party at Benares on Tuesday. The notables of the Gwalior States accompanying their chief are Gunpnt Rao Khudkey, Kaka Sahib Scindia, Ethul Rao Baha Scindia, Bapoo Sahib Awar, Ehsan Alli Ram Chundur Rao, Bappoo, son of the Dewan, Tantia Sahib Khanilkur and Suntajee Roa Tamuk. It has been arranged that the Prince of Wales will proceed in his own conveyances from Agra to Gwalior. Daks will be laid for his Royal Highness's suite and the invited guests of the Maharaja. The Dewan, who will at the time have received the well earned distinction of the K. C. S. I., will receive the Prince at Agra in the name of the Maharaja. The Maharaja himself will meet H.R.H. thirty-six miles from the capital, or if it be deemed more desirable, on the Gwalior bank of the Chumbul. The city of Gwalior is to be magnificently illuminated, from the old Residency to the suburb palace just finished. The palace has just been magnificently and sumptuously furnished throughout for visitors, special correspondents, &c. Tents provided with every comfort will be pitched round and in the vicinity of the palace. The Prince will arrive at Gwalior on the evening of the 3rd of February. On the morning of the 4th there will be a review of the Gwalior troops. During the afternoon of the 4th there will be a grand durbar in the old palace, and in the evening the great feast, for which a lakh of rupees have been set aside. On the morning of the 5th the Prince leaves on his return journey to Agra. We hear of, says the Agra paper, but may not mention, the costly gifts awaiting acceptance by the Prince.

SALT IN THE MADRAS PRESIDENCY.

In a resolution just forwarded to the Madras Government, relative to a despatch from the Secretary of State for India, dated July 29, 1875, desiring an inquiry into the merits of the existing system by which the salt revenue is raised in the Madras Presidency under a Government monopoly and the expediency or otherwise of replacing it by altered arrangements, together with other correspondence on the subject, his Excellency the Governor-General in Council observes that the question of substituting an excise for the existing monopoly system has already been disposed of as regards the two western districts of Madras. As regards the expediency of effecting a similar change of system in the rest of the Presidency, the information available is too imperfect to permit as yet of any definite conclusion being arrived at. Looking at the serious importance of the whole subject, economically, fiscally, and socially, his Excellency has decided, after communication with the Government of Madras and with their cordial concurrence, to appoint a Commission to investigate and report thereon. Accordingly, his Excellency the Governor-General in Council is pleased to nominate the following gentlemen to be a Commission for this purpose, viz., President—C. Pritchard, Esq., Commissioner of Customs, Bombay. Members—J. Geoghegan, Esq., Secretary to the Board of Revenue, Bengal; H. E. Stokes, Esq., Secretary to the Board of Revenue, Madras; R. M. Adam, Esq., Deputy Commissioner, Inland Customs' Service; and Venkasawmy Row, Deputy Collector, Madras. Secretary—H. A. Willock, Esq., Acting Senior Assistant, Vizagapatam. The following questions, among others, will more especially engage the attention of the Commission:—

I. What is the quality and composition of the salt produced at the various works and sold by Government wholesale and by the dealers retail in different parts of the presidency?

II. Are there any grounds for supposing that the people would prefer, or appreciate, a better quality of salt than that now supplied to them? Is it anywhere the practice to re-dissolve and evaporate the Government salt in view to obtaining a purer article for consumption? Is it anywhere the practice for the wholesale purchasers of and dealers in Government salt to adulterate it before allowing it to pass into the consumer's hands? Upon this subject it will be interesting to ascertain if any Bombay salt has been introduced into the Presidency of Madras by land since the opening of the railway.

III. What is the actual cost to Government of the monopoly salt, including under cost all expenditure or loss, actual or constructive, on account of or connected with the salt, that would be avoidable were the entire salt supply furnished under a self-supporting [i.e., a system under which the licensed manufacturer defrays all expenditure which Government incurs to secure itself against any violation or evasion by the manufacturer or his servants of the excise law and rules] system of excise, or imported by sea, made to pay duty before leaving bond, and left thereafter free from interference?

IV. What is the actual retail selling price of monopoly salt (adulterated or not, as the case may be) in town and village bazaars in different portions of the Presidency; and if in any locality this very material exceeds the Government monopoly price, what are the items that compose the excess? The commission should collect information regarding the distribution of the salt, the cost of carriage to different parts of the Presidency, and the amount of such salt which is exported to other parts of British India and the Native States; and give their opinion as to the average annual consumption of salt per head in the Madras Presidency.

V. Is the system under which Government now obtains its salt in any respect needlessly costly? What is the average percentage of wastage—first, between the time of manufacture and the taking over the salt by Government, and second between this latter and the final sale by Government?

VI. What is the extent and value for purposes other than salt manufacture of the whole of the land in the presidency now occupied by open salt works?

VII. Are there any, and if so what, practical difficulties attendant on substituting a system of excise for the present monopoly?

VIII. What could be the probable result—first, as regards the cost to the consumer, second, as regards the net revenue to Government—of substituting an excise for the present monopoly?

IX. The Commission will also examine and report on the cost of manufacturing salt in Pooree and other salt works in Orissa which border upon the Madras Presidency.—Madras Times, Nov. 26.

SIR SALAR JUNG AND THE GOVERNMENT.—Public opinion is steadily strengthening on the side of Sir Salar Jung, as was inevitable after the publication of portions of the recent correspondence between him and the Resident. The Bombay Statesman says:—But one impression can be formed from the correspondence—that the pressure put upon the Nizam's advisers went far beyond the bounds of the privileges of political officers at native Courts; that it was dictatorial and undignified; and utterly unworthy of the British Government, and whether Mr. Saunders was acting upon his own judgment, or simply obeying instructions the conclusion must be the same. The Englishman says there is something not only foreign, but actually repulsive, to English ideas of propriety, in a prince being compelled, like a schoolboy or a servant, to support a plea of sickness by a medical certificate. . . . Sir Salar Jung was required by the Government of India to produce a medical certificate as proof of facts to which he was fully competent to testify, and of which his word as a gentleman ought to have been sufficient evidence. In other words, he was treated as though he was not a gentleman, while his position was that he dared not resent the insult. The local Statesman thinks "it is difficult to exaggerate the mischief that this incident is likely to work. To apologise is too late; and we are not to lose our hold on native sympathies altogether, the Home Government will have to mark the course that has been followed by the expression of its heavy displeasure. Other of our contemporaries speak little less strongly. Even the Pioneer is compelled to disapprove. The Pall Mall Gazette has taken up the matter at home, and the final judgment on the policy of the Indian Government must be severe; it has equally forgotten both good manners and good policy, and altogether ignored the high character of the distinguished native statesman who has been so unworthily treated.—Friend of India.

Miscellaneous.

THE GOVERNOR.—On Friday, Dec. 17, his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos paid visits of ceremony to their Highnesses the Maharajahs of Travancore and Cochin at their respective residences. The usual salutes were fired on the occasion.

HAIDARABAD.—His Highness the Nizam's Government gave a State dinner (at Sir Salar Jung's residence) to Sir Richard and Lady Meade on Monday, Dec. 13. There was a parade of all the troops in Sikandarabad, including the regiments of the Haidarabad Contingent at Bolaram on Wednesday morning, Dec. 15, before the new Resident.

A NEW ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY.—A Madras paper tells us that some of the leading members of the Hindu community of Madras have taken steps to start an Astronomical Society in Madras, the object of which is to promote the study of astronomy in this country. It is intended to establish an observatory in connection with the Society, and it is stated that the observatory will be a training institution, where the science of astronomy may be learnt. It is believed that in time the Society will establish a claim to be affiliated with the Royal Astronomical Society in England. The Society will have the support and services of Mr. Ragoonatha Chariar, of the Madras Observatory, and Mr. Pogson, Government Astronomer, has promised to give it every help. The committee want £2,000 to begin operations, and look forward to their countrymen, and especially to the wealthy rajahs and zemindars, for help.

A BUMPTIOUS BRITON.—A Madras contemporary notices a curious incident which happened at Trichinopoly the other day when everybody was assembled at the railway station to receive the Prince. "Some little time before the approach of the Prince's train, a pilot train arrived, bringing the pages of the Royal party, and one of them objecting to the vehicle prepared for him (a spring bullock carriage) as unsuited to his dignity peremptorily demanded a suitable conveyance. This could not be supplied, and the police officer in attendance, finding gentle arguments of no avail, threatened to accommodate the gentleman with bracelets, not of Trichinopoly manufacture, commonly known as the 'darbies,' for interfering with a police officer in the discharge of his duty. This unexpectedly prompt resort ad vi et armis, and the approach of a couple of police myrmidons, effected a remarkable change in the page's demeanour, and he readily entered the previously despised conveyance, and was seen no more."

THE "SPECIALS" IN A MESS.—The flat-bottomed Colonial steamer and ex-Bombay ferry boat Nagotna, drawing five feet of water, has narrowly escaped becoming even more famous than the historical barque which carried Cæsar and his fortunes. Governor Sir W. Gregory, of Ceylon, had put this steamer at the disposal of the troop of special correspondents, to convey them across the Gulf of Manaar from Colombo to Tuticorin. The Nagotna started twelve hours before the time fixed for the departure of the Serapis, expecting to make the voyage in twelve hours and to be at Tuticorin in good time to receive the Prince. It sometimes, however, blows fiercely in the Gulf of Manaar, the wind rushing in sudden and violent gusts from the Bay of Bengal to the Indian Ocean through the opening between Ceylon and the mainland. The Nagotna encountered bad weather, and, as she is quite unfit to resist a heavy sea, she was for a time in great peril. It was reported at one time that the seas coming on board were putting out the fires, and, as the steamer had no sails on board, the stoppage of the engines would have meant the loss of the ship; and, when one of the specials noted for his coolness came down below and told his comrades that a tremendous squall was coming on, they gave themselves up for lost. Luckily, the black clouds resolved themselves into torrents of rain, instead of wind, and the steamer finally, after a voyage of thirty-six hours, reached Tuticorin in safety.

THE RANGOON PLOT.—We understand another remand has been applied for by the police in the conspiracy case, and that the town magistrate has as yet refused bail for all or any of the prisoners. Mung Shway Tsee, the son of Khayee Shoke, the well known proprietor of the Ahlong Steam Saw Mill, is among those who have been apprehended, and his advocate offered bail for his appearance to the extent of Rs. 20,000, but Mr. McIver considering the gravity of the charge refused to grant bail, and thought the police should not be hurried with their case. As we said before, no story is too absurd for credulous Burmese to swallow, and that the leaders of this absurd rebellion should find followers amongst them is not to be wondered at, by any one acquainted with the character of the people, but that the son of a Chinese landed proprietor, who is probably worth more than a lakh of rupees, a youth who has travelled for some four or five years in China and the Straits, and who is an heir with his brothers and sisters to a large and flourishing business should have been gulled into joining a rabble of ignorant and misguided Burmese in such a ridiculous exploit is surprising indeed. He is not, of outside races, singular in his folly however, for a Surattee trader is also among those apprehended. We can only say if the prosecution succeed in obtaining evidence against these two men that there must be something in the old idea of the moist climate of Burma having the effect of softening the brain.—Rangoon Mail.

COIMBATORE AND THE CHOLERA.—Alluding to the health of the Coimbatore District and the abandonment of the Prince's Annamallay expedition, the Madras Mail says:—"In the week ended the 29th ultimo, 1,495 persons were attacked with cholera and 951 deaths resulted,—nearly double the number in any one of the immediately preceding weeks, From the 1st to the 28th November 2,683 deaths from cholera occurred; and from the commencement of the outbreak of the malady, there have been 9,966 attacks and 6,159 deaths! So long as no man of note is struck down, the dismal record of deaths is comparatively unnoticed. The deaths are 75 per cent. of the attacks, and the disease is characterised by the medical authorities as the most severe type hitherto experienced. Every inhabited place on the Annamaliays has suffered more or less from the disease; four deaths are reported to have occurred in the open spot on which tents had been newly pitched; and one suspicious case was even seen at the Camp for the Prince of Wales on the summit of the hills. It is now five months since the disease, imported from Ceylon, made its appearance in the Coimbatore district, and so far from showing any sign of abatement, it has—notwithstanding favourable rains and a cool temperature—increased of late in virulence. These are facts which ought to be pondered over by that portion of the public that has been led to think that the Prince was deterred from the Annamallay and Neilgherry expedition by a very trifling cause. The greater part of this Presidency is just now in an abnormally unhealthy condition, and the circumstance that the knowledge of that fact has deterred the Heir-Apparent from visiting the districts infected with the widely prevalent malady is a matter rather for congratulation than for regret."

SOCIAL ASPECTS OF MADRAS.—The Pioneer's "special" writes from Madras, where he has been waiting for the Prince:—Madras is very much infested by pretty women. I have no opinion of my own on such matters, but I believe this is confessed on all hands. Now Bombay is singularly exempt from them. On the other hand, there are no white ants here, and punkahs, though just now perhaps superfluous, are universal. Thus Providence, you see, distributes its compensations with very respectable impartiality. On one account, however, I shall never forgive the Madrassees. On what ground of merit, pray, is it of their own or their forefathers, that they should be enabled to live in palaces at the rent which a subaltern pays for a dusty dreary lean-to in the North West? The Government House of Allahabad might perhaps (but I doubt it) find a tenant here at Rs. 150 a month. In fact, a hundred rupee house here would fetch a thousand a month at Bombay, and be cheap at the money. Very modest people in Madras have houses with five or six public rooms. As for compounds, I should say that fifteen acres was about the average. I am told that several have a straight avenue of more than a quarter of a mile from the entrance gate to the house. The consequence naturally is that the distances in Madras are killing to horses. If a man lives within three miles of you, he is accounted a neighbour. Wishing to call on our former Chief Justice, I asked where Sir Walter Morgan lived. "Well, his house is rather out of the way," was the reply, "about seven miles off." But don't suppose he is considered to live in the Mofussil; his house is by no means a hermitage, and is strictly within the bounds of Madras. Mulhar Rao lives here, and his deposition is ex post facto justified by the degraded existence the creature passes here. Government House is finely decorated; but in spaciousness and accommodation hardly preserves its proper supremacy over the countless private palaces of the place. A happy augury for society in Madras is that there are no fewer than seven ladies in the Duke of Buckingham's family, and they seem to have made a very favourable impression. Lady Mary Granville does the honours, and with a pleasant impressement that has won her suffrages all round. Another nice feature in the Government House arrangements, which I hear appreciated on all hands, is the cheerful politeness with which the Duke's A.D.C.'s do their spiriting. Of course there is nothing like rudeness ever to be apprehended from an Indian aide-de-camp; but still it is not unknown for some of those eminent creatures to approach their duties with an evident lassitude—as if you were really the last straw—that makes you uncomfortable with self-reproach at adding to their toils. Altogether the Duke, his family, and his staff are very well spoken of.

ABOLITION OF THE CARTING AGENCY.—The abolition of the Carting Agency, by a Resolution of the Bombay Government on the subject, published on Wednesday last, on the only line on which it was allowed to continue—the B. B. and C. I. Railway—has at last been effected. The Agent of the line, however, the Traffic Manager and the Chief Auditor have stuck to the rotten system to the last; and, notwithstanding the palpable advantages gained by the G.I.P. Railway and the public since the abolition of the Carting Agency on that line, the Agent of the B.B. and C.I. Railway has discussed the matter over again with the Chamber of Commerce, and expresses his opinion, in which the Traffic Manager and Chief Auditor concur, that he "is reluctant to dispense with the carting agencies." It is useless to discuss the question now; all that remains of that profoundly foolish system is the recollection that the merchants of Bombay have thrown away for many years past several lakhs of rupees which they will in future save; and they may now express their astonishment that they should have so long consentsd to build up the fortunes of the carting agent at their own cost, and at the expense of the railway companies as well.—Bombay Gazette, Dec. 13.

THE EGYPTIAN RAID INTO ZANZIBAR.—A contemporary supplies the following information regarding the ports taken by the Egyptians under McKillop Pasha:—"They are collectively known as Banadir, or the ports, and may be found described in the last Administration Report on Zanzibar, published some months since in the supplement of the Gazette of India. As the Banadir coast is capable of great commercial developments, it would be a great advantage to civilisation if it were in the hands of some strong Power. The hold of the Sultan of Zanzibar upon it is of the weakest description, and, outside the towns, is purely nominal, and the object of Egypt in annexing it is probably to connect Gordon's country with the sea by means of the River Juba, the only navigable river on the East Coast of Africa between Capes Guardafui and Delgado. The character of the population of the region through which this river creates almost insuperable obstacles to exploration; and our readers may remember that, only a few years ago, the Baron Von der Decken and several members of his party lost their lives in an attempt to reveal its mysteries. Whether Egypt is the kind of Power to control and develop such a country is open to serious doubt. As a matter of actual fact, we learn that, while the Sultan of Zanzibar is naturally indignant at the invasion of his territories, his slave-dealing subjects are proportionately jubilant. In the Red Sea, the slave-trade goes on unchecked, because we have no treaty with the Porte or Egypt, and they anticipate a like immunity from our cruisers on the Somali Coast, should it be transferred from Zanzibar to the latter Power."

COLONEL BALLARD.—The following paragraph expresses pretty accurately the arrangements that have been made to fill up Colonel Hyde's place in Calcutta:—"Colonel Ballard, C.B., will officiate for Colonel Hyde as Senior Mint Master, but will remain Master of the Bombay Mint. Colonel J. E. Tenant, R.E., now at Roorkee, will officiate of Junior Mint Master, and as Master of the Calcutta Mint. It was at first proposed, we believe, to make the post of Mint Master in both the great ports an Imperial one, and it was part of this plan that the Mint Master at Calcutta should be the senior. Presumably, this was in order that the more experienced coiner of the two might be more readily available to the Supreme Government for any consultations that might be necessary. We need only remark, in passing, that for the last few years Colonel Hyde might fairly have been designated Referee-General in all current questions which have a scientific side to them. In like manner Colonel Ballard, at Bombay, has been charged with many financial and other duties outside the Mint; and since the formal institution of the Board of Port Trustees in the western city, he (Colonel Ballard) had been its chairman. In this fact no doubt lies the explanation of the arrangement now made, which departs to some extent from the original design. [Our readers know well enough that the overladen—not to say hopelessly encumbered—Port Trust of Bombay can only be kept 'head to the sea,' and avoid being swamped, by the most careful pilotage. The Government of Bombay considers that in Colonel Ballard it has the best available pilot for this difficult service, and is naturally loth to part with him for any Imperial consideration. Moreover, the Port Trust itself is an Imperial rather than a provincial speculation, and the Government of India is thus doubly justified in leaving Colonel Ballard at this post."—Times of India.

The amounts allotted were: To Calcutta, £380,000; to Bombay, £300,000; and to Madras, £20,000. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 9⅜d. will receive about 15 per cent., and on Bombay at that price about 14 per cent.; above in full.

THE JOREHAUT TEA COMPANY.—An extraordinary general meeting of this company was held on Thursday, at the offices, George-street, Mansion House, Mr. Burkinyoung, the chairman, presiding. The Chairman moved a resolution declaring an interim dividend of 10 per cent., which was seconded and carried, and the proceedings then terminated.

INSPECTION OF TROOPS BY THE QUEEN.—The Court Circular dated Osborne, Jan. 6, says :—The Queen and Princess Beatrice, attended by the Dowager Marchioness of Ely and Lady Abercromby, drove to Parkhurst Barracks yesterday afternoon, where her Majesty inspected the 107th regiment (Bengal Infantry) under the command of Lieut. Colonel Lockhart, on its arrival from India. A guard of honour of the 49th regiment, with the colours and band of the regiment, was mounted on the parade ground. Colonel the Hon. H. Byng was in attendance on horseback as Equerry in Waiting.

THE LATE CAPTAIN BEST.—Capt. the Hon. Frederick Barnewell Best died on Wednesday last. He entered the Bengal Army in 1849, and served with the 2nd European Fusiliers in the Indian Mutiny campaign in 1857-58; was attached to the 64th Regiment during the operations at Cawnpore, under Major-Gen. Windham; and was also present at the battle of Cawnpore, and affair at Kalee Nuddee. He had belonged to the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms since August 1867. MILITARY ITEMS.—Captain S. W. Bell, half-pay, late 81st Regiment, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Lieutenant-General Sir Neville Chamberlain, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army.—The Army and Navy Gazette believes that employment will very probably be found shortly for Brevet Major East, 41st Regiment, who earned for himself an excellent reputation whilst doing duty with the Quartermaster-General's Department in India.—We are glad to hear that Mrs. Digby Dent, the widow of the young officer who so nobly sacrificed his life at Singapore at the beginning of last year in putting down an outbreak of Chinese convicts, has been elected honorary lady superintendent of the Woolwich Soldiers' Institute.—Captain Arthur Hill, R.E., who is now employed on surveying duties at Bristol, has received orders to proceed to India, in command of the detachment of Royal Engineers which is shortly to leave England to be employed in the Public Works Department in India.

INDIAN TESTIMONIAL TO MR. FAWCETT.—The members of the British Indian Association of Calcutta, who are all natives, have just presented a handsome testimonial to Mr. H. Fawcett, M.P. It consists of a sum of 4,000 rupees, which is invested in the hands of three trustees, Sir C. Dilke, Professor E. B. Cowell, and Mr. J. Da Costa, and is to be applied towards the payment of Mr. Fawcett's future election expenses. The money was raised by subscription in order to pay the expenses of Mr. Fawcett's last election at Hackney, but when news reached Calcutta that those expenses had been already defrayed, it was determined to devote the fund to the purpose mentioned. Another part of the subscription has been invested in the purchase of a handsome ruby necklace for the acceptance of Mrs. Fawcett, and one of the subscribers—Raja Kalinarian Rai—has also forwarded for presentation to the same lady two pieces of Dacca cloth as specimens of native manufacture. The Honorary Secretary of the British Indian Association writes that the committee by whom the subscription was promoted desire to acknowledge the deep debt of gratitude which they and the people of India owe to the member for Hackney for his many and valuable services in Parliament to the cause of good government in India. He adds:—"Since this country has passed under the direct rule of the British Crown it is more immediately governed by Parliament than it was in times past; and while its millions are unrepresented in that great national assembly, they look up to individual, well-informed, and disinterested members like yourself for a tongue to their voice."

Spirit of the Home Journals.

THE FUTURE VICEROY.

The Pall Mall Gazette thinks that if Lord Lytton were to prove a failure the choice of Lord Mayo might come to be regarded as merely a happy accident. Mr. Disraeli is not the man to be careless of such a call upon his powers, and whatever may be Lord Lytton's qualifications for the post, we may be sure that he has not been appointed without careful regard to them. The circumstances of the time are such as to give a special significance to the selection of a diplomatist for the post. Lord Mayo was distinguished among recent Viceroys by the prominence he gave to Indian foreign policy, and it may fairly be supposed that it is Lord Lytton's views on foreign policy that have most brought him before the eyes, and commended him to the patronage, of the Government. It may be of great importance that Indian foreign policy s ould be reviewed by a Viceroy who has had experience of European affairs. The external relations of England promise more and more to be bound up with that side of European politics in which India has an immediate interest, and it will certainly be a gain if one result of Lord Lytton's administration should be the arrival at a more complete accord between the Foreign Department of the Governmen of India and the English Foreign Office as to the ends which English statesmen should propose to themselves, and the means by which it is possible to attain them. Lord Northbrook was perhaps, too completely the financier and the administrator to be seen at his best in the discharge of this function, but Lord Lytton's antecedents seem to mark him out as in every way qualified to fulfil it.

The Daily News remarks that one can hardly imagine the late Lord Lytton entertaining a higher ambition than that his son should come to occupy so splendid a position, and should occupy it with honour and success. The world is, of course, compelled to take the present Lord Lytton's fitness for the office on trust. Mr. Disraeli, to do him justice, is not given to making the higher appointments which come under his disposal without judgment and a sense of responsibility. In the case of Lord Mayo he showed, as every one cheerfully acknowledged afterwards, that he could discern qualities in a public man which the political world in general had not seen. We must suppose that in the present instance he has carefully studied and correctly appreciated the character and capacity of Lord Lytton. Indeed, the fact, which we were enabled to announce at the time, that the Governorship of Madras had been offered to Lord Lytton and declined by him, before it was accepted by the Duke of Buckingham, would seem to show that Mr. Disraeli is maturely convinced of Lord Lytton's fitness for the business of Indian government.

THE SHERIFF OF BOMBAY.—The appointment of Dr. Blaney to be Sheriff of Bombay for the ensuing year reflects much credit on Sir Philip Wodehouse's Government. The honorary office of Sheriff is greatly coveted, because, besides conferring a certain distinction on the holder, its duties are, to say the least, not onerous, while its emoluments are considerable. So valuable a piece of patronage has, of course, frequently been jobbed by the Local Government, who have found it afforded convenient means of succouring a friend in need, or rewarding systematic servility. It must, however, in fairness be added that in some cases the selection of a Sheriff has been made with a single view, apparently, to the encouragement of unofficial merit. Sir Philip Wodehouse—for we understand that it was his Excellency himself who insisted on the nomination of Dr. Blaney—has in the present instance followed the best instead of the worst traditions of his predecessors, by giving the appointment to a gentleman who has no personal friends at Government House or among members of Council and other high officials, who owes nothing to "interest," and who has raised himself from an obscure position and won general respect by his rare energy and public spirit. In spite of the claims on his time of an extensive and not too lucrative practice, Dr. Blaney has put the town of Bombay under great obligations to him by the untiring zeal with which he has worked to improve the administration of public affairs in Bombay. For the last ten years there has been no question connected with sanitary reform, with public works, or with local government in this city, which Dr. Blaney has not taken an active and useful part in discussing; and he may fairly claim a large share of the honour of having created in Bombay a municipality whose constitution and whose working have become a model for other Indian cities to imitate, and in whose development lies the best hope of the progress of self-government in India. Some subjects Dr. Blaney has made specially his own; and to him, more than to any other man, Bombay is indebted for the extension of her water supply, and for the circulation of just ideas regarding the drainage of the town.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, December 27; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, December 25; Calcutta, December 24.

THE accounts of the Prince of Wales's arrival in Calcutta, which fill the local papers, have been to a great extent forestalled by the telegraph. As a matter of course, a citizen of Calcutta informs his Bombay friends that "it is understood that the Prince of Wales and suite pronounce the reception at Calcutta far superior both to Bombay and Madras." A Bombay paper, on the other hand—while admitting that Calcutta is "a city which, if less interesting than Bombay, is laid out on a better plan, and which, as the seat of Government and the official place of residence of the Viceregal Court, has unequalled facilities for entertaining his Royal Highness with a magnificence becoming the grandeur of the occasion"—flatters itself at any rate that Bombay can beat Calcutta in the way of addresses. The Calcutta address is certainly a miserable piece of lawyer's-clerk English and absurd pretension; and if the Prince's answer could be taken as a test of his private opinions, we might agree with the Bombay Gazette that "the metropolis of India has no reason to pride herself on the result of her efforts to show British India what an address ought to be."

IT is said—but of course we cannot vouch for the story's truth—that the Prince of Wales ran his pen through the long list of civil officials whom the Commander-in-Chief of Madras had proposed, with H.R.H.'s permission, to invite to dinner on Friday evening, the 17th December. His Royal Highness at the same time "remarked that he had seen a good deal of civilians, and would be glad to see more of the officers of the Madras Army." The Duke of Buckingham, we are told, was the only civilian present.

THE forty Polo-players sent from Manipur to amuse the Prince had reached Calcutta, under charge of Dr. Brown, the Political Agent, who had also brought over a number of various specimens of manhood from the same country. These included four heralds who, picturesquely dressed, and, armed with their spears and shields, dance a kind of Highland reel; four minstrels, who play on a kind of one-stringed fiddle, accompanying their music with chants in praise of their Rajahs; three nearly naked Tankhool Nagas, of a wild and warlike tribe from the north-east of Manipur; besides three other Nagas from the north, and three from the hills between Manipur and the Burman Valleys, each representing different tribes; three Khongjai Kukies from the south; three Kom Kukies, a peaceful tribe, remarkable chiefly for their enormous earrings; and sixteen Kowpoi males and fifteen females. These latter hail from Kachar. The women are all young and unmarried, dress picturesquely, and dance in a quaint but pleasant manner. Eleven Kacharies, whose tribe at one time were rulers of the entire district, six Thado Kukies, a branch of the Khongjai tribe, and two Loshais, specimens of the tribe which not long ago gave so much trouble by raiding on British territory, and seven Mikars who dance in worship round a wooden shaft fixed on a bamboo support, make up the Doctor's list of curiosities.

THE death of Lord Hastings at Tanjor on the 23rd December was caused by jungle-fever, caught a few days before in the jungle at the foot of the Anamalay Hills, whither he had gone to shoot and collect specimens of natural history. His Lordship had but lately left Tanjor for that purpose.

A BEGINNING is at once to be made with the railway between Agra and Gwalior. The Government of India have advertised for tenders for the construction of the whole line, a distance of seventy-five miles, including the bridge over the Chambal. This line will be another link in the chain of railways that in course of time will run through Central India and Rajputana to Bombay.

SIR F. HAINES left Bombay for England by the Mail steamer of December 27. It is said that Major Blake, of the Haidarabad Subsidiary Force, will take his place till Sir N. Chamberlain arrives.

FROM Lahor we learn that the great bridge across the Chenab, 9,300 feet in length, has been completed, the first train having crossed on Christmas-day. Though the longest in the world, it took only four years in building. It is also said that the Kabul road was again impassable in consequence of marauders.

IT is reported that Mr. W. Lee-Warner, Acting Under-Secretary to Government in the Political Department, will very soon resume his former appointment of Private Secretary to the Governor of Bombay. Mr. E. R. Wodehouse, who has acted as private secretary to his father for the last eighteen months, is coming home with the intention, it is understood, of trying for a seat in Parliament.

A MURDEROUS attack took place on the 21st December on the Superintendent of the Agra Jail. Happily, the hurts received by Dr. Tyler are not severe. The assault was made with bricks thrown from several parts of the jail barracks, and the culprits have since confessed.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Allahabad paper lately broke out into ecstatic praises of the beautiful women he saw in Madras. Where he saw them was to us a mystery, for it was the first time we had heard of such things abounding in the Southern Capital of India. Another eye-witness, at any rate, speaks of the Madras women in very different terms. The Correspondent of the Bombay Gazette was "surprised to find the women the reverse of beautiful." Having carefully examined all the women who appeared in the thoroughfares of Madras during the Prince's visit, he "found no traces of particular beauty in any of them. The women have heavy features; many of them have frowsy black hair; the majority are dirty; and their costumes are dirty also." Such is the conflict of evidence between two eye-witnesses, neither of whom probably dwells in Madras, or has any interest in misstating facts. Will some unbiassed Madrassie be kind enough to tell us which to believe?

WE learn from the Times of India that the Indian Government "did not see fit to accept Mr. Saunders's resignation of the Haidarabad Residentship." It has, instead, granted him the six months leave he first applied for, and has "left it for events to decide whether or not Mr. Saunders shall resume his duties at Haidarabad or not." Still more unfounded appears to have been the statement of the Bombay Gazette about Mr. Saunders leaving the Residency without a word of farewell to the Minister. On the contrary—writes a correspondent of that paper—

Sir Salar Jung saw not only Mr. Saunders but Mrs. Saunders also at Bolaram Residency two days before they left. He was so shocked at the change in the latter that the interview with the Resident was of a most affecting kind, and considerable emotion was felt by both parties. Your mistake has evidently arisen from the fact that to spare Mrs. Saunders anything like a demonstration, their carriage was uncoupled at the junction outside Haidarabad so that they went on their way without the usual detour to Haidarabad.

THE public feeling of Calcutta spoke out with perfect clearness at the great meeting of December 11, when some eight hundred Europeans and natives assembled at the call of the Justices to demand a radical reform in the Calcutta Municipality. The speakers with much reason denounced the abuses of the system administered by Mr. Stuart Hogg, Chairman of the Justices, protested against his holding that office as well as the headship of the police, and called on Sir R. Temple to give Calcutta a true Municipal Government by election instead of the present sham. Each resolution was carried unanimously, and it is to be hoped that the Bengal Government will grant Calcutta the freedom already won by Bombay.

MR. A. C. LYALL'S first administration report of the Rajputana States, the charge of which he took over from Sir L. Pelly in November, 1874, is full of interest. It appears that very satisfactory progress has been made during the year in most branches of Government in the great majority of the Rajput States. Udaipur, Dholpur, and Alwar are happy in the minority of their respective Chiefs, while their administration is being carried on under English officers. Kotah, once "the garden of Rajputana," promises to become so once again under the responsible rule of one of the ablest and most upright of native Ministers. Trade has been rescued from many of the burdens imposed on it by every little Thakur who claimed the right of taxing goods passing through his district, however often they had paid duty before. There is still, however, a suspicion that the Thakurs sometimes get their pickings, even after the Darbar has realised its "lump sums" in satisfaction of all demands. The primitive arrangements between landlord and tenant are giving place to regular settlements like those carried out in British India; and regular surveys are, or soon will be, started in Bhartpur, Alwar, Kishenghar, Jaipur, Jodhpur, and Kotah. Mr. Lyall remarks that a religious movement, which is now making way among the non-Aryan tribes of India, has spread among the wild Bhils on the Mewar-Gujarat frontier. It is thus described by the Political Agent of Mewar:—"A reformer, Soorjee, a Bheel guru, has for some years past been at work among his countrymen on the Mewar-Guzerat frontier. He preaches worship of one God, peace, and good-will. His followers take an oath to abstain from all crimes and offences, spirituous liquors, and causing death to any living thing. They bind themselves to live by the produce of the soil, and to bathe before eating. Soorjee has now a following of upwards of 1,000 bhuguts, or believers, and three disciples, or gurus, ordained by himself to preach and convert."

WE regret to learn by a Calcutta telegram of Jan. 13 that Captain Butler, who was attacked on Christmas-day by a body of Nagas, has died of his wounds. The village of the offending tribe has been burnt. This refers, we presume, to Captain John Butler, of the Bengal Staff Corps, who entered the service in 1861, and was posted to the Assam Commission in 1867. Last year he acted as Political Officer to Colonel Nuthall's force in the successful campaign against the Nagas who had murdered Lieutenant Holcombe.

ON the 10th January at noon the Prince of Wales presented colours to the 1st Battalion of the 14th Foot. After the ceremony, Le Grice and Taylor's Batteries, with the 65th, and 14th Foot, the 6th, and 41st Native Infantry, marched past. The march past of the 6th was much admired. They "went by like the Guards." At 2.30 his Royal Highness started for Cawnpore. On his arrival there, he drove to the Memorial Church with a Guard of Honour of the Buffs and a cavalry escort. There was an Artillery salute. Mr. Prinsep, Colonel Maude, the civil and military authorities, and multitudes of natives were present. The Prince spent some time examining the church and reading the mural inscriptions. Thence they proceeded to the Memorial Well and the Enclosure, which stand in a fair park, with flower beds. The Prince remained inside a quarter of an hour, and walked to the cemetery, close at hand. It is beautifully kept, and forms a strong contrast to the Crimean graveyard. From the cemetery the Prince proceeded to Mr. Prinsep's, where he dined before starting for Delhi.

ON the morning of the 11th the Prince reached Delhi. Lord Napier of Magdala was present, and the Generals and an immense mounted staff rode with the suite through the lines of Artillery, Cavalry, and Infantry from the station through the city out by the Lahor Gate over the ridge for four miles to the camp, where the Prince held a levée of European and Native officers, lasting two hours. The Prince dined with Lord Napier, who is not yet able to ride. Crowds of natives lined the route. Extraordinary triumphal arches had been erected with inscriptions. The general attitude of the people was very respectful and courteous. The Prince received an address from the Delhi Municipality. His Royal Highness was much interested in passing the memorable sites, surrounded as he was by many who had borne a share in the great siege. The nights were very cold.

ON the following day the Prince of Wales left his camp at 9.30 A.M., and drove to Dahirpur. There he mounted his horse and rode over to the plain north of Delhi, where twenty-four battalions of infantry, thirteen regiments of cavalry, twelve batteries, and a pontoon and Engineer train were drawn up in four lines, the infantry in front, extending over a distance of one mile. Lord Napier and his staff, and the foreign officers, joined the party. The Prince's Staff and his suite rode down the lines, after which the troops marched past. The review lasted one hour and ten minutes. The appearance of the troops was excellent. According to the Times reporter, it is difficult to say whether the British or the Native regiments were best. On the right of the Prince were Sindia, the Rajah of Bhartpur, and Holkar's heir; on his left Lord Napier and a general Staff; on the left of Lord Napier, outside the saluting enclosure, in the rear of the Prince, the Duke of Sutherland, Lord Carington, and others. The guns and cavalry went by at a gallop; afterwards the Native regiments, in good style. The effect was "magnificent." The Prince next presented colours to the 11th N.I., formerly the 70th, who remained loyal in the Mutiny. He then inspected the famous Native Sappers, who received distinctive honours from the Queen for their behaviour at the siege. There was an immense concourse of natives and Europeans. The Prince lunched with the 11th Hussars, and afterwards returned to head-quarters. He went out riding before dining at the head-quarters with the civil and military authorities, Lord Napier, the Divisional and Brigade Generals, Staff, &c. At 10 P.M. he drove to the city. There was a grand ball in the Palace of the Moghuls. The Dewan-i-Khas, where once stood the famous Peacock Throne, was brilliantly lighted and converted into an exquisite ballroom. Large crowds had assembled to see the Prince enter Salimgarh, the citadel. He also visited the Jamma Masjid.

ON the 13th the Prince drove to the Kutab at twelve o'clock, mounted to the top, and saw the "wonderful divers" in the well. He visited Humayun's tomb, where the Delhi Princes surrendered in 1857. He returned to camp too late to pass through Delhi, which was illuminated. He dined with the Rifle Brigade.

AT 10 A.M. of the 15th, an attacking force, under Major-General Hardinge, moved from positions north of Delhi, covering the Karnal-road; and the Major-General, mounting infantry on gun-carriages, gained the bridge over the canal without opposition. He there laid pontoons and occupied positions extending across the main trunk road, six miles from Delhi, at 4 P.M.; the defending force, under Major-General Sir C. Reid, making no serious resistance, and concentrating upon the ridge. The great plains favourable for Cavalry, or for a defensive force, were apparently neglected, but General Reid's plans had not then been developed. The Prince and his suite left their camp soon after 5 P.M., but found Hardinge's movement had been made earlier than was expected, and the operations for the day were nearly ended. The forces are equal on both sides. Later telegrams report the close of the manœuvres on Saturday, and the defeat of the attacking force. The Prince of Wales was present at the final action. He had spent two days in visiting the chief objects of interest in and around Delhi, including the positions held by the British troops in 1857. He dined with the officers of the 10th Hussars on Saturday night, and with those of the Rifle Brigade on Friday. The Prince started to-day for Lahor.

ACCORDING to a Times telegram from Calcutta, after the close of the Delhi Camp, the Commander-in-Chief will return to Calcutta to discuss finally the scheme for the improvement of the Native Army which has so long been under consideration.

ACCORDING to the Athenæum a curious document has been forwarded from India to London for publication. It is a poem written by a Canarese scholar, in honour of the Prince of Wales, to whom it would have been presented by the author himself, had his Royal Highness visited Mysor. A free translation of the opening verses will doubtless satisfy the reader's curiosity:—

Om! Invocation to the God, the Prince of Wales!
What is the use of the rain and the sun?
What is the need of the land and the sea, the air and food?
Why should any other God be worshipped?
God is here amongst us, and in him only will I believe.
I have cast aside the Trimurti.
If I ask for rain, the Prince will give it;
If I ask for the sun, the Prince will smile.
Is he not omniscient, omnipresent, almighty, the essence of perfection?
I will breathe him, and he shall be my food.
O may I live in him, and be dissolved in his greatness, as the river is lost in the sea!
I have no need now to doubt in faith; my new religion is one of sight and knowledge.
I have seen the flower-face of my God!

This, we are told, is a fair sample of the two hundred lines which make up the poem. If the reading of it should provoke a smile, we may remember that language of much the same kind was addressed by civilised Frenchmen to the late Emperor Napoleon III., that our own forefathers in the Tudor days paid their sovereign honours almost divine, that the Romans of the Empire sometimes worshipped their emperors as gods, and that polished Athens bowed down before her saviour, Demetrius Poliorcetes, as "a present God, not of wood nor of stone, but a true God."

M. GARCIN DE TASSY begins his valuable Review of Hindustani Literature for 1875 with a just tribute to Mr. C. Markham's Indian Blue-book for 1872-73, as a work of "colossal labour, and yet of remarkable accuracy in details." With regard to the rival claims of Urdu and Hindi to public favour, the Professor brings fresh evidence forward to prove the rich vitality of the former, which after all stands to Hindi much as literary English stands to the vulgar tongue of Yorkshire. It is, in fact, as Mr. Beames points out, "a philological error to regard Urdu and Hindi as two distinct languages." But for the difference in their written character, their substantial identity would be plain enough, and that difference could easily be cleared away by the adoption of the Roman character for both. Urdu seems specially fruitful in poets, seeing that "in the Panjab alone seventy-four poets can be counted up, of whom fourteen are held to occupy the first rank, sixteen the second, twenty-seven the third, and seventeen the fourth or lowest." One native poet, Rajah Siva Prasád of Benares, has just published two grammars, one of Urdu, the other of Hindi, which, according to Professor de Tassy, bear out the conclusion quoted from Mr. Beames, whose great work on the Aryan Languages of India the Professor hails as "one of the most remarkable productions of our time." M. de Tassy glances in succession at all the leading native newspapers, old and new, at the various books published in the year, at the progress of Indian schools and colleges, and at the various literary and scientific societies which are springing up everywhere among the cultivated classes. At Madras, for instance, there has been lately formed a native astronomical society. The Society at Muzaffarpur, numbering five hundred members, has already founded two flourishing colleges at Muzaffarpur and Gaya. We have some interesting details of the Scientific Society of Aligarh, and the Society to Encourage Native Industry at Kasur in the Panjab. A society has been founded at Ajmir, in Rajputana, to uproot the bad customs and attack the superstitions of the people; and a Musulman Society at the same place is trying to establish a Madrasa to revive Mohammedan science. A flourishing Musulman Society has been working for some years at Lahor, and similar bodies have been established at Hoshiarpur, Kapurthala, Jalandhar, Sialkot, Cawnpore, and Bangalor.

WE learn that an experiment of no small interest to India's rulers is about to be made at the Royal Arsenal in Woolwich. India, as we know, abounds in both coal and iron of various qualities, but hitherto the iron has not been utilised on account of the great difficulty of puddling it, the climate forbidding the use of the ordinary puddling furnaces. Some of the iron has been used direct from the ore, but with no very satisfactory results. It is now proposed to introduce some method of puddling by mechanical means, such as the arrangement known as Crampton's revolving furnace, which has been on trial at the gun factories in the Royal Arsenal for some time past, and has been found thoroughly to decarbonise the molten ore without the employment of manual labour. The India Office has therefore sent over a quantity of native coal and iron ore, as well as some pig iron, with a view to work the coal and puddle the iron on the revolving principle. The trial will shortly be made in the Royal Gun Factories, under Mr. Crampton's own superintendence. Should the experiments prove successful, many articles for military use now manufactured at home and exported to India will henceforth be made upon the spot by native workmen out of native material.

BUDDHA'S TOOTH.—Passing into another hall which was unprovided with windows and was lit up by flaring oil lamps, and which was thronged with Buddhist priests, the Prince reached the door of the sanctum sanctorum. The door was reached by a short flight of steps, which were guarded by two ferocious looking black sculptured lions. Leaning against these sculptures were several spears, in readiness apparently to repulse any sacrilegious being who should dare to approach the "holy of holies" uninvited. The sanctum is a dark little room about twelve feet square, and looks as if it were a gigantic iron safe. Its sides and roof are covered with plain white curtains stamped with lozenges of gold. At the further end of it is the shrine, a dark recess, the walls of which are draped with flowered pieces of red silk. On this occasion numerous candles and lamps illuminated the shrine and the room in which it is situated, and the smell and the heat caused by them were intense. An aged priest swung back the doors of the shrine, which were found to be covered by golden chains, the offerings of devotees The floor of the recess was covered with golden salvers and large circular pieces of gold inlaid with precious stones, and in the centre rose a pyramid of gold like a small Hindoo temple. This pyramid covered eight others, all decreasing in size, the last one containing a golden lotus, in the centre of which the sacred tooth reposes. Every cover has a heavy chain of gold and a brooch of precious stones hung upon it, and some of the emeralds in these brooches were of great size and beautiful lustre. The ancient Buddhist who was spokesman for the fraternity took off each pyramid with great tenderness, and when at last the lotus was reached his disciples simultaneously uttered a sound of awe and admiration. To a Buddhist's eye there may be something in the appearance of the tooth to excite feelings of religious enthusiam; but to the eye of an infidel there is nothing of the kind. Wordsworth remarks of one of his characters that a primrose by the river's brim to him a primrose was and nothing more; and I could not help, when standing in front of a relic which millions of people bow down before and worship, feeling as prosaic as the rustic I have alluded to. To the Buddhists the tooth appears as a throne of gods; to me it simply appeared to be an ugly dirty brownish piece of bone about two inches long and one in circumference. If Guatama possessed a set of teeth like the one that is now worshipped in Kandy he must have had a singularly unpleasant grin—a grin suggestive of cannibalism, of devouring babies, of belonging to such a Raw-Head-and-Bloody-Bones as the imagination of our youth used to conjure up after hearing a goblin story in a dim room on a howling winter's night. The appearance of Guatama's mouth must have been a source of perpetual anxiety to his friends. Philosophical dentists must have regarded it with mingled feelings of envy and fear. No wonder that he lived in such a way as to pass into Nirvana. With such teeth in his head, tradesmen were not likely to trouble him with their bills, and he must have been free from the worries and cares which beset mortals who have to earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, and who would like nothing better than a little Nirvana now and then. If Guatama was ever married, his wife must have fled screaming from him into the deepest recesses of the jungle; she could never have kissed him with such teeth. I shudder to think of the acres of tooth-powder he must have used, of the enormous toothaches he must have enjoyed. But of course the whole affair is a fiction. If ever a tooth of Guatama Boodh did exist in Ceylon there is incontestable evidence that it was seized by the Portuguese and carried to Goa, where it was pounded into dust by a sturdy old Archbishop, who refused to aid heathenism by giving it up even for a sum sufficient for the ransom of a kingdom. The Buddhists account for the reappearance of the tooth by saying that when the Archbishop threw it into the water the particles reunited miraculously, and the whole tooth was borne into the bosom of a lotus, where it was duly found one fine morning by somebody or other. It is one of the most extraordinary things in the world how millions of sane men pay abject homage to such an absurd fiction, notwithstanding that they have the evidence of the lie before them in the monstrous thing that is exhibited to them as a human being's tooth.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, January 17, 1876.

RETROSPECT OF 1875.

THE year 1875 opened in India with the last successful movements of the Daffla campaign, the setting out of Colonel Browne's Mission from Mandalay for Yunan, and the arrest of the Gaikwar of Baroda for attempting to poison the Resident, Colonel Phayre. In the first days of January the Daffla Chiefs had purchased peace by the surrender of all their remaining captives. The promising outset of the Yunan Mission was followed early in March by its disastrous failure. One of its members, Mr. Margary, who had joined it at Bhamo after a successful journey across China, was treacherously murdered at Manwain; and the rest of Colonel Browne's party had to retreat fighting for their lives from the attack of a large body of troops sent against them, it was said, by the Chinese Governor of Momain. The English demand for the punishment of those who instigated this outrage was evaded for several months by the Chinese Government. It was not till Mr. Wade's diplomacy had been backed by a show of our naval strength in Chinese waters that the Pekin Government agreed to send a mission of apology to England, and English Commissioners to visit Yunan for the purpose of bringing Mr. Margary's murderers to justice. Suspicions of complicity also fell on the King of Burmah, to whose Court Sir Douglas Forsyth was sent for the purpose of settling a long disputed question of boundary. His Majesty gave way on the point of apparent dispute, but held out for a time against the project of sending an armed English escort through his country to Western China. It was not long however before Lord Northbrook's resolute action, aided by the course of events in China, brought him to his senses on this point also. As soon as he saw that China would not fight us, he too gave in.

The arrest of the Gaikwar was followed in February by his arraignment before a Commission composed of three English and as many Native members, who were to report for the Viceroy's decision the result of their inquiries. After a long and careful hearing of a case which the Gaikwar's English counsel strove to darken by the usual arts of an Old Bailey pleader, the three English Commissioners reported Malhar Rao guilty, while their Native colleagues, including Sindia and the Jaipur Rajah, were more or less doubtful on that point. Acting on his own judgment, Lord Northbrook would have deposed the Gaikwar for his attempt on the life of Colonel Phayre. But the instructions received from the India Office set aside the results of the public inquiry, and the Gaikwar was deposed, perhaps with equal justice, on account of crimes committed by him some time before. His removal to Madras was followed by the selection of a child-ruler in his place, with the wise and able Sir Madhava Rao for Regent and Chief Minister. Sir Lewis Pelly, who had for a time replaced Colonel Phayre at the Baroda Residency, was relieved by Sir Richard Meade, who has now been permanently succeeded by Mr. Melvill from the Punjab. A murderous attack on a survey party in the Naga Hills of Assam, resulting in the death of Lieutenant Holcombe and many of his followers, was speedily avenged by the troops whom Colonel Nuthall led into the Naga Hills. Later in the year a Malay outbreak in Perak, heralded by the murder of the English Resident, Mr. Birch, involved the speedy despatch of a select force from Calcutta to the scene of disturbance. With the help of Captain Channer and his brave little Gurkhas, the discomfiture of the Malays was well-nigh completed before the year's end. With these exceptions, and that of a passing riot in Baroda, the year in India was quiet enough.

The work of legislation also went on smoothly. Among the chief Acts passed in the year was the Bill brought in by the Maharajah of Vizianagram for fixing the legal age of majority throughout India at eighteen. A new Criminal Procedure Act reduced the number of an Indian jury to nine, fixed the majority needful for a verdict at two-thirds, and empowered the Court to examine the accused at any stage of the trial. Another important measure was the new Customs Tariff Act, which abolished all but three of the Export Duties, revised some of the Import Duties, and levied for the first time a duty on long stapled raw cotton imported from England or America. The policy of this last amendment has been loudly called in question by the local Chambers of Commerce, while English manufacturers still clamour for the entire removal of import duties on cotton goods.

Sir W. Muir's Budget Statement for the year revealed on the whole a satisfactory state of things financial, in spite of the hindrances caused by the late famine, and held out the prospect of a moderate surplus at the year's end. Several new railways and sections of railways were opened during the year. In November the new Department of Marine Surveys was formally constituted under the direction of Captain A. D. Taylor, an eminent officer of the old Indian Navy. Early in the year Sir Andrew Clarke, the late Governor of the Straits Settlements, took his seat as the first Minister for Public Works in the Viceroy's Council. The untimely death of Lord Hobart, Governor of Madras, left a vacancy, which has since been filled up by the Duke of Buckingham. Lord Napier's term of office being about to expire, Sir Frederic Haines has been transferred from the chief command in Madras to the post which Lord Napier has held for six years with conspicuous credit. In Sir Neville Chamberlain of the Bengal Army the Government has chosen a fit successor to Sir Frederic for the Madras command.

The premature report of a Russian occupation of Merv served for a time to arouse the usual excitement in the Anglo-Indian world. Meanwhile a new excuse for Russian aggrandisement was suddenly offered by a rebellion in Khokan, which resulted in the conquest and partial annexation of that Khanate by Russia. By the latest accounts from that quarter it would seem that much work was still cut out for the conquerors by the turbulent tribes around their new possessions. In Afghanistan and Persia nothing of importance occurred during the year. Sher Ali still held his son Yákub in confinement, and baffled the attempts of Yákub's partisans to win his deliverance by force of arms or intrigue. In Europe the interest of the Eastern Question was revived by the rising in Herzegovina against the Turks, and diplomacy is still engaged in trying to avert the crisis which Turkish misrule and blundering had gone far to bring about. Pending the settlement of the Turkish difficulty, the English Government availed itself of the Egyptian Khedive's financial needs to secure, by the purchase of his Suez Canal shares, a solid guarantee for England's right of way through Egypt to India. The visit of the Sultan of Zanzibar to this country has confirmed that ruler in his loyal resolve to aid our Government in the suppression of slavery. An Egyptian raid into his dominions has just been timely arrested by the interference of his English ally.

The visit of the Prince of Wales to India has lent extraordinary lustre to the last days of North Northbrook's rule. From the time of his landing in Bombay, on the 8th November, the Prince's progress has been marked by a succession of striking pageants and an ungrudging display of loyal enthusiasm from all classes of his future subjects. The Prince himself appears to have won all hearts by the courtesies of which by birth and breeding he is an acknowledged master, and no untoward incident has yet marred the warmth and splendour of the welcome prepared for him at every stage of his journey, although the prevalence of cholera in Southern India compelled him to turn aside from some places which he would else have visited. Before the Prince's arrival in Calcutta Lord Northbrook completed his farewell tour among the Native States of Rajputana and Central India.

The rainy season in India was marked by the occurrence of disastrous floods in some parts of the country, and by serious breaches in some of the southern railways. The first stone of a new harbour which will greatly benefit the trade of Madras was laid in December by the Prince of Wales. The returns of railway traffic were generally satisfactory, and Mr. Juland Danvers has gone out to see for himself what improvements can be made in the working of Indian railways. Trade on the whole was fairly prosperous. Several new cotton mills were started in Western India, and in some other directions the prospects of native industry were improving. The harvests on which India depends for her food supplies were generally good; but in some parts of Bahar scarcity has resulted from unusual drought.

In Parliament the chief debates on Indian topics during the year dealt with the claims of the old Bombay Bank to compensation for losses caused by the Indian Government, the question of abolishing the Government monopoly of opium, the grievances of the Indian Civil Services, the progress of Russia in Central Asia, the Indian Coolie Traffic, the hours of labour in Indian Factories, and the Indian Budget, which was brought forward in the very last days of the session. A Parliamentary Committee to consider the claims of Indian officers to Bonus Compensation decided in favour of certain concessions which, under Lord Salisbury's instructions, are now being carried out. In the Indian Council several changes have occurred. The seats left vacant by the deaths of Mr. W. Arbuthnot and Sir F. Currie, by the retirement of Sir W. Baker, and the transfer of Sir L. Mallet to the post of Under-Secretary, were filled up by General Strachey, Sir H. Ellis, Colonel H. Yule, and Sir Alfred Wilde. Among eminent men connected with India we have also to record the deaths of Sir Edward Ryan, Dr. John Wilson, General Hall, Sir J. Hope Grant, and Mr. I. T. Prichard. The Princes of India have lost one of their number by the death of the Rao of Kutch.

LORD NORTHBROOK'S RESIGNATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Lord Northbrook's resignation of the Governor-Generalship of India can be viewed by those who have watched the course of events in that country only as a protest against the dangerous policy by which our Eastern Empire is being governed.

In the time of the East India Company the administration of that vast dependency was periodically subjected to a careful review, and such changes were introduced in the charter which conferred on them their rights, as that review suggested. These safeguards ceased to exist in 1858, when the Government of India was transferred to the Crown, and they were replaced only by the responsibility of the Crown Ministers to Parliament, a responsibility that the inaction of the latter in Indian matters has rendered nugatory. The administration of the country has thus been left entirely to a Secretary of State, whose appointment is dependent on no particular knowledge of the country he is called to rule, and over whose actions, as far as they affect India, there virtually exists no constitutional control or restraint whatever. When the obligations of that officer to the Cabinet to which he belongs and to the political party whose support is essential to the very existence of that Cabinet are carefully considered, no surprise can be felt at the interests of India being so often sacrificed to English interests, and at her finances being wantonly burdened to satisfy English wants and English ideas. Moreover, under a defective combination like the above, watchfulness would often be relaxed, waste and extravagance would creep in, and ultimately lead to the deplorable condition of things so forcibly described in the late Lord Mayo's Budget Speech delivered in 1870, when deficits appeared year after year, although taxation had been pushed to the utmost limit consistent with common prudence, and the permanent debt had likewise been yearly increased. It was also a natural consequence of such a state of things, that, in the anxiety to save the Empire from bankruptcy, little regard should have been paid to the effect that the severity of the taxation resorted to was likely to produce on the material condition and feelings of the people, or the future prosperity of the country; and when we consider those constitutional restraints which we hold to be essential to good government at home, it would be folly in us to expect that an executive, liberated from almost all such restraints, could have withstood all temptations and steered clear of all dangers. No surprise need therefore be felt at the deplorable results referred to by Lord Mayo, when, a few months before his death, he wrote to the Secretary of State that the popular discontent which pervaded every class throughout India would, if it were allowed to continue, amount to a political danger, the magnitude of which could hardly be overestimated.

Such was the state of things when Lord Northbrook accepted the appointment of Viceroy and Governor-general of India. On his arrival in that country, his public assurances promising relief inspired so much confidence that the anxiety and irritation which disturbed the popular mind were soon allayed; and the considerate policy and careful economy subsequently pursued, while they powerfully contributed to the preservation of order and the restoration of equilibrium in the finances, have endeared him to the people of India as no Viceroy had previously been endeared to them.

Reform, such as was needed, could not, however, be effected without the exercise of much firmness in controlling those who had previously been allowed to encroach on the powers and functions of the Viceroy, and without prejudice to many illicit interests that had sprung from the preceding unfortunate condition of things. The Public Works Department, in particular, was in a literally disgraceful condition; and it needed, on the part of the Viceroy, not only incessant labour to detect and rectify faults, but much firmness and resolution to render the responsibility of officials in India a reality, and in discarding the many unsound speculative schemes that were being pressed on the attention of the Government, and some of which had already obtained its sanction.

No Viceroy, since Lord Canning's departure from India, exercised so much personal influence over the administration as Lord Northbrook; but this state of things was not destined to endure; and, by the end of 1873, it became manifest to the public that the position of the Viceroy had relapsed into what it had previously been, that of a chief executive officer charged with giving effect to measures often condemned by him and generally adopted without his concurrence, but to which he had nevertheless to lend the support of his countenance. Under such circumstances, to resign became a duty to oneself as well as the best service that could be rendered to the people of India, as it implied an unmistakable protest against the unsound and dangerous policy by which their destinies are being ruled.

January 8. DELTA.

THE COTTON FRAUDS ACT.—The working of the Cotton Frauds Act last year is reported to have been, on the whole, satisfactory. Out of 59 cases, implicating 62 defendants there have been 46 convictions and 47 persons convicted, three of whom were afterwards discharged on appeal. Most of the cases have been in the Southern Mahratta country.

A Comparative Grammar of the Modern Aryan Languages of India; to wit, Hindi, Panjabi, Sindhi, Gujarati, Marathi, Oriya, and Bengali. By John Beames, Bengal Civil Service, &c., &c. Vol. I.—On Sounds: Vol. II.—The Noun and Pronoun. London: Trübner and Co. 1872, 1875.

Now that the second volume of Mr. Beames's work on the "Comparative Grammar of the Modern Aryan Languages of India" has made its appearance, and the scope of the book is manifest, we have thought that some remarks on what has been done might not be uninteresting to our readers. And we offer them the more willingly because it is the fashion to assert that thorough Oriental scholarship is now to be found only in Germany. Mr. Beames's book will satisfactorily dispel so gloomy a thought; for it abounds throughout with evidences of profundity of investigation, extensive scholarship, logical acumen, and scientific accuracy. It is a book to make the hearts of Orientalists glad, although its pages contain much that is disputable, and more that is incomplete. The work, however, as it is, does for the highly interesting and long neglected Aryan dialects of India what the great work of Bopp has already done for Aryan speech in general. It shows the nature and extent of the relationship subsisting between the seven great languages of Northern India (viz., Hindî, Panjâbi, Gujarâtî, Mahrâthî, Sindhî, Oriyâ, and Bengâlî); and accounts for the differences, and traces the origin of the forms of words and inflexions now current in those idioms. Hitherto we have been content to acknowledge a general relationship between these languages; the work of Mr. Beames enables us to trace with precision the extent and quality of that relationship.

The first volume deals with phonetics only, and this allows the subject to be somewhat fully treated. Mr. Beames begins by showing that Sanskrit is not the direct parent of the modern dialects; but that these took their origin in ancient Prâkrits or spoken dialects, which preceded classical Sanskrit in point of time, and which are to be distinctly traced in the Vedas themselves. These ancient Prâkrits here spoken of are not the Prâkrits of Indian dramatic literature; these latter are so artificial in their character that Mr. Beames, in common with many other scholars, cannot bring himself to believe that the people of India ever spoke such a form of speech (p. 201). The Prâkrits to which Mr. Beames alludes were the actual dialects in daily use, mere caricatures of which are found in the plays; and these workaday dialects necessarily differed widely from the polished (sanskrita) language, which latter was evolved from them by learned Brahmans for literary purposes (p. 4). This view of the matter clears away much of the mist surrounding the subject; and will tend towards correcting the superstitious reverence felt for classical Sanskrit.

In the course of his inquiry Mr. Beames is able to remove much of the non-Aryan taint supposed to infect the languages of Northern India. Hitherto, it has been customary to treat all words as non-Aryan for which a Sanskrit parent could not be readily found. This is now shown to be a hasty proceeding; for by well-established processes of sound-change long lists of these seeming strangers are brought within the Aryan fold. The cerebral sounds are very ably treated by Mr. Beames. These sounds, also, were considered to indicate non-Aryan influence extending to even classical Sanskrit itself. This fallacy has been exploded by Mr. Beames, who adduces excellent reasons for believing that the cerebral sounds are in reality more primitive than the dental; and that the latter come from the former by a lassitude produced from climatic influence which disinclined the tongue to lift itself high enough in the mouth to articulate the rough cerebral letters (p. 233). Such a theory accords well with the facts that cerebral letters characterise Vedic forms of words, at a time when the Aryans were a conquering horde; and that they are still found in use among the hardier members of the Aryan race.

It is impossible to particularise more than a few points of interest in a book so full of details. The foregoing must suffice as an indication of the contents of the first volume, so that we may have space for a little criticism. Mr. Beames is wrong in deriving the Bengali âchchhe from the Sanskrit aksh (p. 215). It is only a corruption of as, "to be." We do not quite follow him either in his argument showing that the change of ksh into chh is an older and more regular process than its change into kh. What is said on p. 313 contradicts what has been advanced on p. 311; thus proving that Mr. Beames has not well considered the matter. In reality, it would seem that in the case of ksh the sound of the k was disregarded in speaking, leaving only sh, which latter corrupted on two parallel lines into chh and kh (see p. 261), neither of which can be considered more antique than the other. Again, Mr. Beames is hasty in asserting that there are no organic changes of gutturals in the modern languages (p. 209); as instances we may cite Wâsanjî, a town near Girnar, for Vâsukî; nagîch for nazdîk; and bechnâ the causal of biknâ (Hindî).

The second volume, which deals with the formation of nominal and pronominal stems and inflexions, is necessarily more generally interesting, although perfectly unintelligible, without a fair appreciation of the phonetic laws enounced in the first volume. The four chapters which the volume contains treat of the Formation of the Stem, Gender, Declension, and the Pronoun, respectively. The first chapter traces the processes by which Sanskrit nominal affixes were at first corrupted along with the words to which they had been attached, until at last word and affix became welded into one indissoluble mass forming a secondary base ready for the attachment of fresh affixes and inflexions. But Mr. Beames is wrong when he says (p. 2) that Sanskrit grammarians "do not admit the possibility of a noun" being derived from anything but a verbal root. This was the doctrine of the Nairuktas; but they were stoutly opposed by the Vaiyâkaranas, a school of grammarians who taught that all nouns were not derived from verbs. Mr. Beames is also too vehement in his denunciation (p. 22) of those who refer some irregularities in language to caprice, more especially as, in pp. 34, 89, 115, and 290, he himself has to resort to a similar explanation. But this is far less important than the haze which seems to hang over the Sanskrit inflexion which is held to have given rise to the nominal stem. In p. 76 it is explained that the Sanskrit oblique form dwells in the popular mind, "and is used in grammatical formations, while the classically modified nominative is forgotten." In p. 153, however, we learn that it is from "the actual nominative only" that the modern languages take their forms. This latter is the view advocated in Vol. I. p. 210, and is much the more reasonable of the two; indeed, the very instance cited on p. 76 as a "high-flown nominative," is rightly said, on p. 152, to be found in all the seven languages. We must also point out that the affix thañ takes vriddhi, not guna, as stated on p. 84; nor does the word ghatika prove the absence of guna, because short a cannot be gunated. Here, also, it is the absence of vriddhi which is marked. In p. 88 occur mûkhya, Sans., and mûkhî, Hindî, for mukhya and mukhî respectively.

The history of the phonetic changes which have produced modern stems lead on to an explanation of one of the worst puzzles of the modern languages, viz.—the apparently capricious gender of their words. The vocables now in use are shown to be the remnants of words possessing distinct sexual affixes, or to be words having natural gender inherent in the ideas they express. At page 173 is given an interesting and extensible list of words, which in the course of time have changed their gender; and at page 177 an opinion is expressed that grammatical gender is dying out. But the assertion that the neuter is "a very useless abstraction" requires modifying; for it is the supersession of sexual forms by a common neuter type that has produced the simplicity of the Persian and the English.

In the third chapter, treating of Declension, Mr. Beames starts the ingenious hypothesis that complication in grammatical forms is an evidence of barbarity, not of culture. He is the champion of the modern vernaculars, and logically enough asserts that they "are not corruptions of the Sanskrit; they are improvements on it" (p. 182). His meaning being that as men progress in culture they effect their purposes with simpler and handier implements; and that, therefore, highly inflexional forms of speech share the fate of all other cumbrous tools. In this, and in all other respects, Mr. Beames yields the palm to Hindî. This language is not only the most important in respect of its wide diffusion; but stands first in its antiquity, chief in its simplicity and regularity of construction, in its conformity to rule in derivation, and in its conservation of Sanskritic sentiment. In connection with this question it may be observed that Mr. Beames explodes the common notion that Bengali is the vernacular most nearly allied to the Sanskrit. The fact is exactly the reverse; for if that language were stripped of the pure Sanskrit words borrowed during the last fifty years, what remained (i.e., the real language) would "stand out as a coarse rustic dialect destitute of refinement and precision" (p. 230).

After these preliminary discussions we come to the derivation of the declensional affixes. The oblique singular form is shown, with much ingenuity, to have resulted from a fusion of all the old Sanskrit case-endings into one indistinguishable termination (p. 212); and the oblique plural from a somewhat analogous process (p. 219). Mr. Beames, abandoning the view he took in Vol. I. p. 48, now holds, with Hoernle, that the Hindî affix ko is to be deduced from the Sanskrit word kaksham (p. 257); and he also follows that scholar in deriving the genitive sign kâ from krita (p. 287), in preference to the commonly received derivation from the adjective affix -ka. He also believes that the pronominal genitive in -râ has the same origin (p. 312), but leaves the very natural question unanswered, why krita, becoming karâ, should corrupt into kâ for nouns and into râ for pronouns. Besides, how are we to explain the Persian genitive râ, and the allied forms lâ, nâ, of the northern hill-tribes? do they also come from the Sanskrit krita?

The reasons which induce Mr. Beames to derive the Hindî instrumental ne from the Sanskrit lag are very cogent; but as laun, from the same source, is tolerably common in a different sense, his derivation infringes his own canon (p. 238) that "the same form can hardly be the origin of two different cases." Setting this aside, the affix ne, in common with the other affixes, is more likely to have come from an independent word, than from a corruption of the Sanskrit termination -ena, as has been hitherto held, for want of a better explanation. But we cannot hold with Mr. Beames that the absence of the sign ne from ancient poetry proves the modern origin of such a form. The antiquity of the objective construction is shown by its presence in all the languages, except Bengali and Oriya, the two most modern members of the group. That the old poets do not use such an affix by no means proves its non-existence; for in all the poetry in the Prema-Sâgara, a work of the present century, the affix occurs only six times, although the prose is dotted with it in the usual manner. Nor is Lallu-Lâl the only modern writer, in common with the ancients, who suppressed this form; for in the Rev. John Parsons's translation of "The Peep of Day," published in 1872, ne is nowhere to be found in that gentleman's poetry. The fact is, that in native opinion, the agent or instrumental is only a form of the nominative; Indians, therefore, do not hesitate to employ the latter where, as in poetry, they wish to condense as much as possible. When, however, the base of the agent differs from that of the nominative, the former is employed, as Mr. Beames admits (pp. 267, 269) to have been the practice of Chand, the most ancient writer in the vernaculars extant. This proves that it is the sign only which is suppressed, not the case changed. The poets are invaluable as preservers of ancient forms of words, but they are comparatively worthless as authorities on points of grammar or idiom, owing to the astonishing license they allow themselves. In despite of the cogency of some of Mr. Beames's arguments, his views on this case-ending will not be accepted without much criticism.

The derivation of the Hindî aru, aur, from the Sanskrit anu is hasty. The sense of the latter word resists such treatment, and the fact that the former word also means "other," should have directed him to the much more probable source suggested in "The Laws of Language," page 39. In that book the word is shown to be derived from the Sanskrit antara, "other," and to be only one form of the word which has overspread Europe in the shapes and, und, et, other, or, &c.

It will be evident from the foregoing that there are several matters in Mr. Beames's work which admit of further argument; but these are few in comparison with the large number of details in which most scholars will be disposed readily to concur. These volumes present us with the first attempt ever made to deal comprehensively and exhaustively with all the Aryan languages of Northern India; and the result is alike creditable to the head and to the heart of the learned author. The motive which inspires him is nobler than a mere love of curious speculations; it is a desire to win for the vernaculars of India their rightful place in the estimation of the learned, so that they may become great civilising agents among the humbler classes of Hindustan. In this wish we heartily concur; and, adopting our author's words, say that "If we wish to see this seething mass of ignorance, vice, and superstition permeated by the light of truth and knowledge, we are bound to fight" against those who despise the rustic dialects; "and, by upholding the speech of the land-folk and helping them to purify and improve it, to render it impossible for interested persons to establish any barrier between the free intercourse of all classes of society."

Spirit of the Indian Press.

DIRECT OR INDIRECT TAXATION.

The Pioneer does not suppose that, for the present, there is any more danger of a renewed income-tax than of ship-money in India; but we take it that this is a time in which more may be done than will at once appear on the surface towards defining the fiscal policy which is to prevail in India for the future, so far as the mutability of politics allows the future to be at all foreseen. And this being the case, it is obvious that so much of the Indian revenue as indirect taxation yields will have to withstand the pressure of modern fiscal doctrines, which are hostile in principle to indirect taxation, and almost passionately devoted to the extreme developments of free-trade. There are fascinations, for instance, connected with the idea of making India one great free port, which it will be hard for Indian opinion to combat. But we have constantly maintained, in these columns, that the indirect revenue of India ought to be guarded with the most jealous care, and we do not believe that the proclivities of any English statesman who might come to govern this country, no matter how closely addicted he might be in the first instance to the doctrines of scientific finance, would ever lead him into the serious mistake of abolishing Indian custom-duties, small though they at present may be. The impressions he would soon gather in this country would avert such a result. Direct taxation, even in European countries, though it may be the most economical, is the least bearable in its incidence, and twenty-five shillings that even an Englishman pays the State in driblets through his tradesmen, is disbursed more easily than a pound given to that fiend in human shape, the tax-gatherer. In India the same principle applies with a hundred-fold intensity by reason of faults in the national character, which can no more be altered than the colour of the race. We almost think that the worst indirect taxes are better for India than the best which hit a man full in the face. For example, the salt tax is quite indefensible in principle, as judged by the rules of European scientific finance, and yet it is, beyond all difference of opinion among men qualified to judge, the best we have in this country. It is practically no burden at all on the people, and it yields six millions sterling. On the other hand, the land tax is the best direct tax for India that can be imagined, and yet it is a great misfortune, as the state of the Deccan peasantry is showing very clearly at this moment, that we have to rely on it so largely. We do not suppose that any one is now so great an enthusiastic for direct taxation as to justify the alarm of the Hindoo Patriot lest the income tax should be revived. That is happily dead and buried beyond redemption, and its memory is anathema maranatha on all hands. But the real Real problem before Indian statesmen is this,—how can the area of indirect taxation be enlarged, and the area of direct taxation be contracted? We do not say that on all hands as yet this is admitted to be the problem; but a great point would be gained if it were.

"TEMPORA MUTANTUR."

The Indian Statesman remarks that the majority of the periodical absentees return to India with exaggerated ideas of the delights of life in England, which have been all roseate to them from the fact that they have seen crowds of friends who have not had time to forget them, have had money to spend and nothing to do for it, who have in fact seen only the sunny side of home life, and what is even more important, have not stayed long enough to become tired of it. Under similar conditions they would be far more charmed with India, as all travellers in this country can testify. But returning to work is like returning to school; the fancy invests the holiday with far more charms than belonged to it in fact, and everything in India is found disagreeable in a proportionate degree. Of course many men are fond of their work, are glad to get back to it, and soon forget the disagreeables of Indian life in the pursuit of an ambitious or a profitable career. But the tendency of these frequent visits home is to create distaste if not disgust for everything in this country, and is unfavourable to the cultivation of that personal interest in the land and the people, on the part of Anglo-Indians, which has done so much good in days gone by. A deep-rooted dislike of the country, and a distinct refusal to consider it as a home, is a disease fast spreading among all classes of our countrymen in India; and having called it a disease we need scarcely remark that it is far from being a healthy sign. It will be a bad day indeed when the members of the local services—to say nothing of other classes—shall consider themselves to have as little association with the country as a regiment from home sent for a certain term of service. But a feeling of the kind is on the increase, and the main object of many men having more or less important work in India is to get out of it as often as they can. We are not of course denying the advantages of going home where health is really concerned, nor undervaluing the enlargement of the mind which comes from a visit to Europe of sufficient duration and beneficially employed. But whatever the gain in health—to those who are strong enough for the exertion—it is impossible that very valuable experience can be gained from these flying trips. Their utility may indeed be described very frequently in the words of a late genial member of the Civil Service, who used to say, "I always go home once a year to see Poole and the new plays." In domestic life the practice leads to complications from which we were once spared. The separation of families was always among the most distressing conditions of Indian life. There was no help for it as concerned the children after a certain age; though many families have rebelled against this general belief, and have kept their olive branches in India altogether, with perfect success both as regards health and education. But as a rule men's wives stood by the domestic colours, and unless actually "ordered home," waited for the time when their husbands could accompany them. But all this is changed. Ladies have grown like the unicorn in Job—so happily quoted by Carlyle—who will not "abide by the crib;" and we might add if we dared—following up the illustration of the latter author—that "they are as much wedded to their desolate freedom as the wild ass of the desert."

THE PRINCE AT CALCUTTA.

The people on the platform pressed upon the Prince so closely when he did arrive that it was only by standing upon the chairs that others could see him. This, of course, shut out all but those in the front rows. Had an open space been preserved in the centre, all would have seen admirably.

At 4.30 P.M., his Royal Highness, accompanied by the Lieutenant-Governor, and attended by his Royal Highness's suite, entered the Royal barge under the usual Naval honours of manned yards, and the thunder of guns. The members of the deputation from the Government of India and the officers of the Lieutenant-Governor's suite preceded his Royal Highness to the shore. This ought really to have been one of the "sights" of the landing; but the excess of decoration effectually hid it from one half of the spectators, there being a sort of double screen of "decoration" between them and the river. How far this "excess of glory obscured" the view, may, perhaps, be imagined, when we state that upwards of 400 flags were employed on the occasion.

The Prince of Wales thus landed at Prinsep's Ghaut, under a salute of twenty-one guns from the ramparts of Fort William.

It may be doubted whether the firing of the guns was as telling as the greeting of the Jacks, for we should state that along the sides of the gangway space had been allotted for one thousand sailors, who were thus the first to greet the Prince as he proceeded from the floating stage to actual terra firma. Their hurrahs were genuine, and after them it seemed almost useless to attempt anything but a more subdued demonstration, with any hope of success. Behind the sailors there was space for thousands of natives, and this was occupied to the fullest extent from which any possible glimpse of the landing could be obtained. There would also be a possibility of many thousands obtaining a view from the Strand Bank, though of course it would be a distant one, and the raised platforms would shut out all but the mere landing.

His Royal Highness was received on the floating pontoon by his Excellency the Viceroy, attended by his personal staff, and also certain office bearers and others.

Prinsep's Ghaut was profusely decorated. The building itself had of course been duly whitewashed, if such a term may be used for the process that gave it the colour of stone. The river front presented a most lively appearance, the columns having plants at their base, and being themselves covered with decorations; garlands of leaves and flowers wound spirally round them to their capitals. These again were decorated with flags and pennants. The cornice of the ghaut both on the eastern and western front presented a conspicuous legend wrought in flowers, "Welcome to Calcutta;" while over the two small side arches were inscriptions also in flowers. On the river front "God Save the Queen" and "God Bless the Princess of Wales." These again were surmounted with flags and other materials, and in the centre were the "Plumes," also surmounted with flags, pennons, and other forms of decoration in the greatest profusion. These brilliantly coloured flowers, &c., showed to great advantage in the declining sunlight; though we should explain that all these flowers were artificial, not the production of nature. The sun that showed them to advantage would of course have proved speedily fatal to any natural flowers separated from the plants that produced them, as it did to the leaves forming the wreaths. On the eastern front the decorations were similar; flags, wreaths, and flowers, in which were wrought the words "Albert Edward," and "Alexandra" with "Peace" and "Prosperity" at the base; both being trampled under foot by the crowd ere the day closed.—Indian Daily News, Dec. 25.

THE UNVEILING OF THE STATUE OF LORD LAWRENCE.

The ceremony of unveiling the statue of Lord Lawrence, the site for which had been fixed opposite the South Gate of Government House, took place on Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 15, at half-past four o'clock. Amongst those present were Sir Richard Temple, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal; the Right Rev. Dr. Milman, Lord Bishop of Calcutta; Sir William Muir, the Hon. Mr. Bayley, Sir Andrew Clarke, Sir Douglas Forsyth, the Hon. Mr. Hope, General Ranadip Sing of Nipal, the Hon. Mr. Cowie, the Hon. Raja Narendra Krishna Bahadur, his Highness the Maharajah of Banaras, his Highness the Maharajah of Panna, the Hon. Mr. Macpherson, the Hon. Mr. Louis S. Jackson, the Hon. Mr. Glover, the Hon. Mr. Schalch, the Hon. Mr. Reynolds, the Hon. Kristodas Pal, Babu Digambar Mitra, Nawab Amir Ali Khan, Raja Harendra Krishna, Babu Kunjulal Banarji, Mr. MacEwen, and a large number of other gentlemen. There was also a large attendance of ladies. A few minutes after the appointed hour his Excellency the Viceroy and Sir Henry Norman drove up, and were received right gladly.

After an eloquent speech from Sir R. Temple, the Viceroy thus spoke in his turn:—

Sir Richard Temple, Ladies and Gentlemen,—It was with great pleasure that I accepted the request of the Committee that I should unveil the Statue of Lord Lawrence. After the eloquent speech which we have just heard, it is not necessary for me to dwell on the services of Lord Lawrence, to his Queen, and to his country. These services, indeed, are so recent and are so distinguished that the mere mention of the name of John Lawrence is sufficient to bring them to the liveliest recollection of us all. I am glad to see here to-day General Ranadip Sing, the Commander-in-Chief of the Raja of Nipal, because it reminds me that when John Lawrence was holding his own in the Panjab, the forces of Nipal were advanced in support of her Majesty's troops from the Himalayas. (Cheers.) And I am glad to see here worthy representatives of the Native Princes of India, because it reminds me that amidst all the pain that must always remain in connection with the events of 1857, although we may be joining it with deserved honour to those distinguished men who were connected with them—in the midst, I say, of that pain, there is one circumstance which stands without any alloy. That is the fact that the events of 1857 have produced more intimate, more friendly, and more firm relations between the British Government and the native Princes of India. (Hear, hear.) Sir Richard Temple has had singular opportunities, from the high offices he himself filled under Lord Lawrence, of becoming fully aware not only of the more striking public acts of Lord Lawrence's career, but of the simplicity of character, soundness of judgment, and strong common sense which distinguished him in his every-day life of public duty. (Hear, hear.) I myself have had occasion in England to hear many important utterances and weighty opinions of Lord Lawrence, and I can say, from my own personal knowledge, what Sir Richard Temple has said in that particular. The ceremony at which we are assisting to-day differs in one particular from such ceremonies generally. When we unveil statues of distinguished men, and we hear rightly recounted, as has been done so admirably to-day by Sir Richard Temple, their high qualities and their great merits, the honour we do them is mingled with a feeling of sorrow that their services have been lost to their Sovereign and their country. On this occasion we have the good fortune, while doing honour to Lord Lawrence, to be able to wish him a long life, and we are glad to know that, at the present time, he commands the full vigour of his faculties to give his valuable assistance to the counsels of the State. (Loud applause.)

His Excellency then proceeded to unveil the statue amidst loud cheers. The statue is about as good a likeness of Lord Lawrence as could possibly have been executed; and a large number of people flocked round the spot after the Viceroy, the Lieutenant-Governor, and others had left.

STATION TALK.

LAHOR, Dec. 13.—The state of Lahor at present reminds one of the building of Carthage as described by Virgil in the "Æneid," and, in spite of the cold which has just set in, fervet opus in a way to which Lahor is quite unaccustomed. As to the Fragrantia mella, I am not quite so sure of the parallel; and I fear the Mantuan bard would have used somewhat different language to express that acrid smoke which arises about sunset and envelopes the station in a pungent mist, which is due to the peculiar kind of fuel wherewith the natives, at the close of their day's work, are wont to warm their bodies, cook their food, and round whose fires they are wont to assemble in circles to discuss pice, and whatever else engrosses the attention of such assemblages. At the present time, indeed, pice must be a very satisfactory subject with these Cercles de Bouse, as skilled labourers, or men that call themselves such, whether masons or carpenters, are earning twelve annas, instead of six a day, which was the usual rate of wages for such labour this time last year; and common coolies, instead of the accustomed three annas, are asking, and getting, six. If the increase in the rate of wages be the end and aim of all good government, as certain political economists tell us it is, then the coming of the Prince of Wales has an excellent economic side; and the thirty thousand rupees, or whatever the paltry sum may be which is taken from Peter to assist his Royal Highness in supporting the dignity of the future Emperor of the East, is being given back to Paul half a dozen times over in the form of increased wages and increased profits. The Montgomery Hall is roofed in at last, and the painting of the ceiling and interior decoration is being vigorously pushed forward. The Government College, opposite the kutcherry, which occupies, perhaps, the finest site in Lahor, is almost roofed in; and although the lofty tower, which will help to make it one of the handsomest and most striking buildings in Lahor, is not yet commenced, inasmuch as it cannot be finished by January, the great central hall is to be ready for the reception of the Prince of Wales, who is to open the College when he is at Lahore. I suppose there will be some sort of meeting or educational tamasha on the occasion, to which plenty of native gentlemen may be bidden; and it is just possible that the cause of education may get a slight fillip from this mark of royal favour and interest. The native gentlemen of Lahor have taken, and still take, a marked interest in the education question, and they certainly deserve a pat on the back. When the absolute success of any movement, especially such a movement as education, is considered, it must never be forgotten that we have not yet held the province for thirty years; and the mere interest taken by the natives themselves in such a subject, whatever may be the immediate results of such an interest, is a great fact in this early history of the British administration of the country. You have perhaps heard that the entertainment offered to the Prince of Wales by the English residents of the Punjab, and which was to have taken the form of a banquet, is to be a dance, and arrangements are being made for such a ball and supper as Lahore can compass. But, however successful the ball may be, the most interesting entertainment which will be offered to the Prince during his stay at Lahore will be the native fête in the Fort. As soon as the preparations are further advanced, I hope to give you a full discription; it is enough, at present, to say that the Shish Mahal bids fair to rival the "Halls of Dazzling Light," so familiar in play-bill language to our young days of pantomime-going.—Times of India Correspondent.

MR. W. TAYLER.—Mr. William Tayler has returned to India, and is now at Patna, the scene of his former labours. We, Behar Herald, do not know what has brought him to this country at this age; but whatever the cause may be, he is welcome among his large circle of friends, both European and native.—Indian Daily News, Dec. 24.

LORD NAPIER AT DELHI.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief inspected the Cavalry Division at the Delhi Camp on Friday, December 17. His Excellency was on the ground punctually at ten, and rode down the long line of thirteen regiments. Afterwards taking his stand at the saluting flag the division marched past, then trotted, and then galloped. After the march past the manœuvres commenced, and seemed to result in a dense cloud of dust. A large and mixed assembly had come out to witness the review, amongst whom were a number of ladies on elephants. The troops are keeping in capital health, thanks to the fine bracing weather and excellent sanitary arrangements. An officer of the Rifles unfortunately had a bad fall from his horse the other day at parade, which resulted in a broken leg.—Indian Daily News.

PREPARATIONS AT AGRA.—The public and private audience halls of the Moghul Emperors in the Fort at Agra are being restored as nearly as possible to their original perfection; everything must be made ready for the Prince's visit, and the time is limited. The Diwan i-am, or Public Hall of Audience, is a lofty roof of quadrilateral form, supported on pillars of red stone. These pillars were formerly covered with marble plaster, picked out in upright lines with gold and vermillion. The hall is open on three sides, and on the fourth is flanked by the wall of the buildings separating the Diwan-i-am from the quadrangle to the front of the river. On the right hand side of this quadrangle is the Diwan-i-Khas, or Private Hall of Audience, which is faced with marble and inlaid work. It needs but little restoration, for the only damage it has suffered is the loss of several precious stones with which it was inlaid. The Diwan-i-am, on the other hand, was found with its pillars whitewashed. This had been done in the barbaric era of the Public Works Department history. The pillars are now being rapidly restored to their old condition; and so strictly in accordance with the true principle of restoration, that the original lines are to be kept, although they are not all of them perfectly straight. The floor of the large hall is divided into twenty-seven squares, of which nine, fronting the Royal seat, are to be kept, on the evening of the N.W.P. ball, for a promenade, and the rest given up to the dancers.

UNFINISHED BUILDINGS.—There is nothing so disappointing to an engineer or builder as to be obliged to leave his work in an unfinished state. Government engineers are peculiarly liable to annoyance from this cause, and the officers who have from time to time been in charge of the public buildings lately erected in Calcutta have especially suffered. Both the new High Court and Post-office have been shorn of features which would have added much to their appearance. The tower of the former has been dwarfed and disfigured, and the want of the mansard roofs over the corner towers of the latter cannot escape notice. More glaring still is the condition in which the new Imperial Museum has been left. Carried up in its magnificent proportions to one dead uniform sky level, the building which, with its upper features of domes and pyramids, would be one of the greatest ornaments to Calcutta, is, as it stands, an unsightly monument to the incapability of Indian financiers; for want of cash is, we hear, the only obstacle in the way of its completion. A laudable attempt is, however, being made to give the public an idea of the proportions of the completed building. The domes, &c., will be built up in light scaffolding, and their lines and curves will be delineated in light on the night of the illumination. If the night should be fine and the effect what we expect, it may tend to induce the Government to complete the building in something more substantial than blaze and bamboos.—Pioneer.

THE CAVALRY AT THE CAMP AT DELHI.—The special correspondent of the Pioneer writes:—As far as I can make out of the cavalry, they seem to have rather reversed the order of things; by way of commencing the camp, they have turned out in order of battle. There were seven native regiments out yesterday, under Colonel Watson, C.B., V.C., and they seemed to have their hands full in repelling an almost ubiquitous foe. First he was evidently heard of in the Alipore direction, for the whole division moved that way in column of route, with advanced guards, feelers, flankers, and all the usual precautions. Then he must have made a fine flank march, for change of front was made to the right; the reserve brigade went at him, and the second brigade in support came up, and finished any survivors, and what was the original leading brigade formed the reserve. However, the enemy must have had a reserve with seven-leagued boots; for, when operations were over, the division seemed to be almost facing towards the ridge, its original rear. It was a pretty sight, and the Bengal Cavalry made a very creditable show; but, surely, this opening of the Camp of Exercise with such extended movements as of questionable advantage. In each movement Colonel Watson placed in rear, and near the flanks of his front or fighting line, squadrons from the supporting or second line, whose duty would be to repel flank attacks, or fill up gaps. I should like to hear the opinion of cavalry officers on this arrangement. The advisability, nay necessity, of having squadrons so placed has been acknowledged, and of late years all commanders with any idea of drill have worked in that formation; but, surely, instead of having squadrons of other corps to fill up gaps, it would be better to increase the strength of the first line by a complete regiment, and let the flank regiments drop a squadron 100 yards in rear before advancing to attack. Then, if occasion required, comrades would be amongst comrades when the gaps were filled up, and not strangers and men of other corps, and perhaps different nationalities. However, this is a matter of detail; but it is attention to trifles that ensures perfection.

THE PRINCE'S VISIT.

The illuminations of Madras certainly deserve a few words, and those of praise. It must be remembered there are here few long streets of shops whence from lamp to lamp may hang graceful festoons of lights. Indeed, in what I have ventured to call the boulevards there are no lamps, and thus the Madras artists are not tempted as in Bombay to affix to the post hideous triangles and clumsy circles, which to my mind represented crucified geometrical problems. The grounds of Government House were perfectly brilliant with Chinese lanterns, converting the sombre carriage drives and the shady walks into vistas leading into an enchanted land. The banquet hall and the Governor's mansion glittered with devices in lamps, and the pretty little boat-house, resting snugly by the river-side—itself a perfect little gem—was covered with radiant lights of every colour. The graceful bridges which span the river, too, showed their lines of flickering golden lights, above which were festoons of variegated lamps, and the private houses displayed both gas lights and transparencies. The latter, of course, consisted of portraits of the Prince, generally in uniforms of a pattern which no one ever saw; and sometimes he would be accompanied by the Princess of Wales in a dress similar to the one in which, according to copper-plate engravings, Mary, Queen of Scots, "suffered the extreme penalty of the law." The Prince of Wales's plumes and other appropriate designs were also numerous. Occasionally one saw a representation of a red-faced young lady with a regulation helmet on her head, and seated in an extraordinary fashion on the edge of a shield bearing the device of a cross. This interesting creature languished towards a hay-fork, which she held in her hand, while a peculiar cast of the eye showed her anxiety for a ship which was seen far away in the offing. A legend beneath informed the gazer that the picture represented "Britannia, the Pride of the Ocean." The Madras people, however, occasionally struck out for themselves a more original line. On the Stamp-office was a series of transparencies representing postage stamps of all values, while some of the shopkeepers were careful that the decorations of their houses should give a gentle hint of the nature of the business conducted within. One enterprising firm placed a motto immediately over their signboard, and written in precisely the style of letter, so that the motto read with perhaps a weak attempt at a pun, "God preserve the Prince of Wales, direct importer of marmalade, jams, English stores, ale, wine, spirits, and boots and shoes;" and there were several others equally amusing.

The transparencies were for the most part well painted on black ground, so that when carefully lighted nothing was visible but the brilliant colours of the paint itself, which gave the picture a strong appearance of reality. Coloured talck, too, was brought into use in the matter of crowns, &c., which were punctured for the jewels, and the light shining through the talck made the representation as faithful as if the crown had been bedecked with living gems.

I will just add that the Madras people are a spirited and wideawake community. Not many men would have thought of using the rails in stock at the yards of the station for barricades, seats on the stands, and a host of other purposes. The gharrywallahs, however, overstepped their mark by asking on the day of the Prince's arrival Rs. 25 a day, or Rs. 100 a week, for a gharry (much better ones by the way than the Bombay ones). No one seemed inclined to pay at that rate, and such is the force of political economy that the next day the price fell to Rs. 5 a day. On the day of the Prince's arrival in Madras the Madras Standard was printed in blue ink.—Times of India Correspondent.

THE RANGOON PLOT.—Thirty-one prisoners have been already committed for trial at the forthcoming Rangoon sessions charged with being implicated in the recent plot to destroy the town of Rangoon and massacre all the European inhabitants. Four others will be discharged on their furnishing substantial security.

SOLDIERS' DINNER.—Our festivities—says a Madras paper—have just ended with a dinner, given to the soldiers and volunteers, at the Royapooram terminus before the holiday fittings are dismantled. This is about the only feature in which we have been left behind Bombay, if we except the Masonic Ball, which after all was a private, rather than a public demonstration. It was impossible to get up the dinner during the stay of his Royal Highness, but it has been none the less a success for coming in at "the heel of the hunt."

SIR W. GREGORY.—His Excellency Sir William Gregory, the Governor of Ceylon, arrived at Madras on Thursday, the 23rd December, on board the P. and O. steamer Malwa. His Excellency was on his way to Calcutta, on the invitation of the Prince of Wales, to be present during his Royal Highness's visit to that city.

THE HARBOUR.—We presume our harbour works will now be pushed on as expeditiously as circumstances will allow. The Government of India, upon the requisition of the Madras Government, have sanctioned an advance of £50,000, so that no delay for the want of funds need take place. Upon this Government devolves the duty of establishing a Port Trust for Madras, and making such arrangements in connection therewith as will ensure a revenue sufficiently large to pay the interest with total cost of the undertaking, which is at present set down at £628,000.—Madras Athenæum.

DEATH OF LORD HASTINGS.—We regret to announce the death of Lord Hastings, at Tanjore, on Wednesday last, the 22nd inst. His Lordship arrived in Bombay a little more than a month ago on a shooting expedition to this country. From Bombay he proceeded to the Western coast of this Presidency and made his way through the Wynaad district to Ootacamund, enjoying such sport as he could find. He, however, evidently made too long a stay in the feverish tracts of the Wynaad, where the seeds of fever must have been sown which ultimately resulted in his death. From Ootacamund he proceeded to Tanjore and Point Colimere, at which latter place there is good shooting. Here he exposed himself too much to the sun, and the seeds of fever which had been sown in the Wynaad consequently developed themselves into a dangerous brain fever, which resulted in his death at Tanjore, on the 22nd inst. Lord Hastings was accompanied on his tour by his friend Lord Ebrington, who fortunately has escaped an attack of fever.—Madras Athenæum.

PLOTS BY THE EX-GAIKWAR.—The Baroda correspondent of a vernacular paper relates the following:—Notwithstanding the strict surveillance exercised over him, the ex-Gaikwar has contrived to open communication with Baroda by forming a league with his halallore in Madras, who was instructed to convey a letter, surreptitiously placed within his reach, to a certain banker in the former city. The banker was requested to forward the missive to the notorious Dosoomea, and to effect this he employed the services of a bairagi, in whom he could confide. This latter mysterious messenger was found prowling about Lal Baugh on the night of the Prince's arrival in Baroda, and having excited the suspicions of a native official, was forthwith arrested, and confessed the plot. The same authority states that a quantity of jewellery has been discovered buried underground at the residence of Bulwuntrao Ravulkur, late Dewan to the ex-Gaikwar Mulharao, and now dwelling at Cullianee in enforced banishment. The Baroda authorities have caused this precious hoard to be dug up, which is valued at two lacs of rupees.—Times of India.

THE WHITE TOWN OF MADRAS.—The houses in the European quarter of Madras are remarkable for their size and the spaciousness of the compounds attached to them. The hotel I am staying at has several acres attached to it. Large trees are sprinkled about the vast compound; one corner of it is a swamp, where huge bullfrogs croak the whole day long, and lead like the fair Gulnara—that is the name, is it not?—in the "Arabian Nights," a very happy life at the bottom of the sea; behind the house there is a tank which is at least two acres in extent; and here the dhobies in the neighbourhood come and wash their clothing, the bullocks of a company of several joint-stock milk companies wallow in it, and every morning and sometimes, as when the sun is setting, lank naked human figures disport in the browny-green water side by side with the buffaloes. The residents need not get out of the compound for their "constitutional;" they might ride a half mile race round it; if the trees and shrubs were a little more numerous they might even have a day's shooting in it with tolerable success. At present some young Haileybury men are staying in the hotel, and they have found out the capabilities of the compound as a cricket-field. . . . All the hotels in Mount-road—which you must know is the principal highway in Madras, being the means of communication between White Town and Black Town—have compounds of a similar description. Even the shops adjoining the thoroughfare have compounds that would astonish a Bombayite by their size. The houses are suitable to the compound. They are large, lofty, and generally have heavy porticoes. At the same time, considering their size and extent of the grounds attached to them, they are wonderfully cheap. A very large house, situated in the middle of a park, can be rented for from Rs. 80 to Rs. 120 a month. I hope the time is not far distant when rents in Bombay for really good houses will be as reasonable as they are in Madras. Certainly in the matter of cheap and extensive house accommodation Madras is superior to Bombay. But although it is very fine to have parks attached to your bungalows, such luxury cannot be obtained without considerable drawbacks. The result of the ample accommodation that the Europeans have provided for themselves in what I shall still call White Town is, that Madras is prodigiously scattered. Parallel to the shore it measures nine miles, it is three miles in width, and the Municipal boundaries enclose an area of twenty-seven square miles. This makes the distances enormous between private Residences and the places of business in Black Town. Almost the first thing that a stranger admires is the palatial dimensions of the Residences; but his first cause of complaint, unless he has been exceptionally teased by the impudence and effrontery of native coachmen and servants, are the distances. Ordinarily a visit from one house to another cannot be made under half an hour, consequently a day's calling is a very serious business. It is considered a good joke now in Madras to allude to a person living three or four miles away as your next door neighbour. This matter of enormous distances is the cause of a great waste of time.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

ADMINISTRATIVE.—Mr. Gonne arrived at Bombay by the last mail, and it was understood that Mr. Ravenscroft would hand over charge to him of the Political Department, and resume charge of the Revenue Department from the Acting Secretary, Mr. Pedder, who reverts to his substantive appointment of Municipal Commissioner of Bombay.

CARWAR.—Advices from Carwar of 30th Nov. state that the steamer Prior, of about 2,000 tons burthen, was loading cotton there for Odessa; 5,000 bales had gone on board, and she will take altogether nearly 10,000 bales. Carwar consequently presents a lively scene, especially at the bunder. Carts and bullocks line the whole way from the bunder to the town.

THE SUCCESSOR TO THE LATE DR. BAPTISTA.—We hear on good authority that Assistant Surgeon J. F. Gonsalves, L.M., a graduate of the Bombay University, now in charge of the Government Dispensary at Bassein, is to be nominated to the vacancy caused by the death of Dr. Baptista, and will be appointed to minister relief to the poor European pensioners and others residing in Poona Cantonments. Mr. Gonsalves is spoken of in highly complimentary terms by the heads of Departments with whom he has served, and they are those who have had the best opportunities of becoming acquainted with his merits.——Dakhan Herald, Dec. 20.

POLITICAL.—We recently called attention to certain political complications in Wadwan consequent on the appointment of Mr. Naradbhai as sole Administrator of that State during the minority of the Thakur. The usual course in such cases has hitherto been to appoint two administrators, one representing the British Government and the other the family of the minor. We learn by telegraph that Mr. Naradbhai has been called upon to resign his post in Wadwan, and that the fact has been notified to all concerned in a proclamation issued by Captain Wodehouse, the Political officer. The mother of the Thakur has been asked to designate a Minister who may be associated with an administrator nominated by our Government.

MILITARY.—The s.s. Dalhousie sailed from Aden on the 12th December, carrying a detachment of the 2nd Grenadiers Regiment Native Infantry to Vingorla. A detachment of the 6th Regiment Native Infantry arrived at Aden in the Dalhousie.—Our Carwar correspondent, writing on the 18th December, says:—The Commander-in-Chief is expected here on the 3rd, with thirteen tons weight of tents, about ten tons of luggage, and nine horses. He remains here three days, and goes on by dawk to Honore and Gairsappa. There is no cholera at present at Chendya, but the weather keeps dreadfully hot, 88 deg. is the general thing at four o'clock in the afternoon.—Times of India.

CAPTAIN HOGG'S MOUNTED INFANTRY.—Lord Mark Kerr has sent us the following letter:—

My dear Hogg,—There are two sayings which have become proverbial. One is "What's in a name"? and the other is "Give a dog a bad name, and hang him." Why do you give your pamphlet a bad name? I recommended you to call it by what I think should be its right name—"Dismounted Cavalry," and you still call it "Mounted Infantry!"

Read Verdy du Vernois and Boguslawski. You quote the latter, indeed, as an opponent to mounted infantry. And so he is. And so am I. But, if you read to the end of the sentence wherein he condemns mounted infantry, you will find he approves of dismounted cavalry. You will find in Verdy du Vernois's second volume, "Etudes sur Part de Conduire les Troupes," on "The Division of Cavalry forming part of an Army," some remarks strongly in favour of dismounted cavalry. His only fear is that, in their training, they may attempt infantry drill and movements.

I say to you—No lines of skirmishers on foot advancing to attack, followed by lines of supports on foot. No marching. No manœuvring as infantry. Gallop a regiment or a squadron to the retired tactical point, dismount half of them, or three-fourths of them. These can defend themselves and their horses equally well as infantry, no doubt, if attacked by cavalry. But do not dismount them anywhere, except where their horses can be in some safe place, close at hand. No marching, no manœuvring on foot! Remember you are always light cavalry, with the power, in addition, of making good shots on foot, from advantageous positions, when required to do so.—Yours, &c., MARK KERR, Major-General.
—Bombay Gazette.

THE LATE M. MUNZINGER.—The Khedive's schemes of territorial aggrandisement must needs suffer, in some degree, by the death of M. Munzinger, C.B., or Munzinger Bey, as he was styled of late. Most things, however, seem working together for the Khedive's good. While the cosmopolitan Pashas and Beys are all zealous for the Khedive's triumph, poor Munzinger is not likely to be missed for very long by the Egyptians. It is we who miss him to this day. Our Government allowed M. Munzinger to change English for Egyptian employment. Had he been kept at Aden, in some position like that held before by Mr. Rassam, the Foreign Office at home would never have been so ignorant as it has shown itself of the permanent occupation of all Western and Southern Arabia by the Turks, and the wholesale aggression of the Egyptians on the African side of the Red Sea. M. Munzinger, as an Arabianised Swiss, was far superior to the Chaldean protégé of Mr. Layard; both in sagacity and usefulness. He it was who, during the long period of suspense before and after the ill-judged mission of Mr. Rassam, supplied Sir William Merewether, then Resident at Aden, with all the authentic information that could be obtained as to the proceedings and disposition of King Theodorus. He then held an appointment as German Consul for the Western shores of the Red Sea. The emoluments of this post must have been but slender; and when the opportunity arose for him to be employed directly on our behalf, as a pioneer of British justice in those regions, he readily accepted the offer. In this character M. Munzinger was simply invaluable. Lord Napier could no doubt point out many mistakes connected with our entrance into the country, the subsequent strategy, and the dealings with the coast tribes and the Abyssinians proper, into which we must have fallen but for M. Munzinger's careful observations and circumspect conclusions. Some part of the credit no doubt is due to Sir W. Merewether in the first instance; and the praise awarded to the great and successful chiefs is due to them partly because of the good sense they showed in trusting their scout as they did. M. Munzinger has been spoken of having "become a simple adventurer, eager to carve out a kingdom for himself in Africa." But a good deal of evidence is wanted before this view can be accepted.—Pioneer.

THE BOMBAY PORT TRUST.—Another matter which has not, we believe, escaped Sir Louis Mallet's attention is the peculiar state of the relations between the Bombay Port Trust and the private enterprise of the port. A Port Trust, according to English ideas, represents the interests of the whole community, and one of its special functions is to encourage every kind of enterprise that is likely to be of service to the Port. But in Bombay the Trust consists of a number of nominees of the Government, who are told that it is their first business to convert into a paying property a great extent of reclaimed land and wharves purchased by the State for an enormous price. There are, at the same time, other wharves belonging to private companies or firms to which a great portion of the trade of Bombay might more conveniently resort than to the wharves of the Port Trust. Inspired, therefore, by a feeling of loyalty to the Government, rather than by any regard for the interests of traders, the trustees have deliberately adopted the indefensible policy of trying to crush private enterprise and to compel the whole trade of Bombay to use their property alone. With the cordial assistance of Government, they are at present using their utmost efforts to destroy the usefulness of the Sassoon Dock,—a property which has cost Messrs. D. Sassoon and Co. from £150,000 to £200,000—by forbidding the firm to export opium from their own dock, though Messrs. Sassoon are the chief exporters of opium from Bombay

There is no pretence even that the revenue can suffer if permission be given for the export of opium from the dock, for the duty of Rs. 600 a chest is paid before the drug enters Bombay, and, besides, Messrs. Sassoon are charged Rs. 1,100 a month for a Custom House at which every parcel of goods passing into or out of the dock is examined The prohibition is avowedly maintained for the sole purpose of obtaining the wharfage fees on the export of opium to swell the revenue of the Port Trust. To a man trained in the best English school of political economy this abuse of power by the State and the Port Trust must seem something infamous. The Trust will be a curse instead of a blessing to the place if it is to go on ruining private enterprise for the purpose of paying interest on the money the Government of India chose to invest in an unproductive estate ; and either the Govern must consent to forego receiving interest on this capital, and so allow the trustees to give private enterprise fair play, or it must go a good deal further and buy up all the foreshore properties now in private hands.—Bombay Gazette.

CHURCH DISESTABLISHMENT.—The discussion of what is grandiloquently called the Church Disestablishment question has lately been revived in India and Ceylon, and both the dependency and the colony have produced their Mialls and their Liberation societies. The question, however, is one not so much of disestablishment as of disendowment ; and the Chairman, Mr. Leechman, at a recent public meeting held at Colombo, very properly stated it as follows :—"Whether it was right or expedient that the bishop, clergymen, and ministers of one or two Christian denominations should be maintained at the cost of a population utterly at variance with them in matters of religion." The population of Ceylon, according to the census of 1871, amounted to very nearly two and a half millions, of whom 1,320,000 were Buddhists, nearly half a million Hindus, about 171,000 Mohammedans, and about 500 Veddahs. Of the remaining quarter of a million the vast majority were Catholics, while the Protestants of all denominations were fewer than 60,000, only a fourth of whom derived any benefit from the funds devoted to Church establishments. In the memorial which the Ceylon people are forwarding to her Majesty on this subject, it is stated that the total ecclesiastical expenditure is Rs. 140,000, about a sixth part of which is drawn by the Bishop of Colombo, "who has not more than twelve chaplains, five aided clergymen, and a few catechists to supervise." The memorial goes on to state that "the only justification offered for the ecclesiastical department is the need of providing for the religious wants of the servants of the Government in the island ; but that many of these do not belong to the subsidised churches, or are placed beyond the reach of the chaplains, whose congregations chiefly consist of members of the general community ;" these "members" being subsequently described as "that section the best able, from position and wealth, to perform the Christian duty of supporting its own pastors and religious ministrations." The "disestablishment" petition has been strongly supported throughout Ceylon. The agitation, if we may venture to call it so, has been conducted in the friendliest spirit ; and the Liberationists have been at great pains to show that, in objecting to Bishop Coplestone's two thousand five hundred a year, they have been influenced by a far deeper regard for principles than for rupees. They would agitate even if his Lordship's income were only twenty-five pice.—Pioneer.

COURTS-MARTIAL.—At a general court-martial, assembled at Peshawar on Oct. 26, 1875, Private W. Cummins, 1st battalion 17th regiment, was arraigned on the following charges :—Charges : 1. Approved and confirmed. In consideration of the Court's recommendation to mercy, and the prisoner's fair character during the nine years' previous service, I commute the sentence to two years' imprisonment with hard labour.—NAPIER OF MAGDALA, General, Commander-in-Chief in India. Camp Dhurampore, Nov. 9, 1875.—At a general court-martial, assembled at Bareilly on Oct. 22, 1875, Private W. MacCready, of the 1st battalion 18th Royal Irish regiment of foot, was arraigned on the following charges :—Charges : 1. Having, at Bareilly, on or about Sept. 12, been drunk. 2. ALTAF ALI KHAN v. AHMED BUX AND OTHERS.—This was a suit instituted by the respondents to establish right to considerable property belonging to one Bunnoo Jan, deceased, the appellant, who was the defendant, and is Bunnoo Jan's husband's son, being in possession. Bunnoo Jan had executed a power of attorney in favour of her agent, for the purpose of having the Wajib ool-Urze drawn up. In this power of attorney she declared her will to the effect that on her demise these respondents should succeed to her property in equal moieties, besides which, three witnesses deposed to having heard her declare that such was her will and intention. For the appellant it was contended that such expression of her will was not sufficient under Mohammedan law to pass her property after her death. The High Court (N.W.P.) held (modifying the order of the Sub-Judge of Bareilly) that the intention of the testatrix to bequeath all her property was amply proved, and that she had declared her will in a manner conformable to Mohammedan law. Mr. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. D. Nasmith were for the appellant; Mr. Leith, Q.C., and Mr. Arathon, for the respondents. Their Lordships upheld the order of the High Court appealed against, and dismissed the appeal with costs.

SUICIDE OF A MEDICAL STUDENT.—Dr. Hardwicke held an inquiry on Monday afternoon at the Court-house, King's-road, Camden-town, on the body of Manatzi Nasarvaneja Dalac, aged twenty years, a native of Bombay, who having gained the Gilchrist Scholarship of £100 at the Bombay University, came to this country to study medicine. He attended the classes at the University College Hospital, and lodged at 188, Euston-road. The evidence of K. A. Dantra and Homhormusjee Dantra, cousins of deceased, and other witnesses, showed that he was a quiet, steady young man, and had been depressed in spirits from over study. On Wednesday night he was seen reading in his room. When the servant took up his breakfast on the following morning she found him lying in bed, partially dressed. She spoke to him, but receiving no answer, called some of his brother students, who found that he was dead. On the pillow a bottle containing cyanide of potassium was discovered, and on a further search being made, an envelope was found, on which was written "Don't blame any one." Mr. H. R. Croker, resident medical officer, University College Hospital, made a post-mortem examination, which proved that the cause of death was poisoning by cyanide of potassium. A verdict of suicide while in a state of unsound mind was returned.

RAIN is now wanted for the cold weather crops in most parts of Bengal.

A SOCIAL AMALGAM.—An interesting meeting recently took place at Dr. Atmaram Pandurung's house in Bombay. Professor Monier Williams was received by a number of distinguished Hindu gentlemen at a social gathering. We give the description of the meeting as sent to us by a friend:—"Dr. Williams, Mrs. Williams, and their daughter dined with Dr. Atmaram on Monday last. After dinner they were met by a few friends, the Hon. V. N. Mandlik, Messrs. K. T. Telang, B. M. Wagle, Dadoba Pandurung, Gunputrao Bhaskur, Shamrao Vithal, and N. M. Paramanand. Mr. Williams had a long conversation about the Vedas and the religious practices of the Hindus, and expressed himself much interested. His family assisted the hosts in musical performance and in conversation. The whole evening passed off pleasantly, and the cordial reunion of European and native families was delightful to behold. I think Mr. Williams feels that Englishmen here have caught the contagion of caste from the Hindus, and, like all good imitators, have possessed themselves of a bad imitation of the original institution. But there is no help for it in the existing state of European and native society, and all good men among both must lament the evil."—Indian Mirror.

"PANIC SUNDAY."—Meanwhile, on that 14th of June, there was great excitement in Calcutta. It was reported that the sepoys at Barrackpore had risen in the night; and soon the rumour ran that they were in full march upon Calcutta. They also went abroad the story, and ready credence grasped it, that the Oude people at Garden-reach were to rise at the same time, and to join in the threatened massacre of the Christian people. So the hearts of many failed them through fear, and some, terror-stricken and bewildered, left their homes, seeking refuge wheresoever safety could be found. From an early hour in the morning a great shudder ran through the capital, and soon the confused activity of panic flight was apparent. The streets, in some parts of the city, were alive with vehicles. Conspicuous among them were those great long boxes on wheels, known as "palanquin carriages." Within might be seen the scared faces of Eurasians and Portuguese, men, women, and children; and without, piled up on the roofs, great bundles of bedding and wearing apparel, snatched up and thrown together in the agonised hurry of departure. Rare among these were carriages of a better class, in which the pale cheeks of the inmates told their pure European descent. Along the Mall on the water-side, or across the broad plain between the city and the fort, the great stream is said to have poured itself. The places of refuge which offered the best security were the fort and the river. Behind the ramparts of the one, or in the vessel moored on the other, a safe asylum might be found. So these fugitives are described as rushing to the gates of the fort, or disgorging themselves at the different ghauts, calling excitedly for rowing-boats to carry them to the side of ship or steamer. There was a prevailing feeling that the enemy were on their track, and that swift destruction would overtake them if they did not find shelter within the earthworks of Fort William or the wooden walls of the shipping on the Hooghly. Hard work had Colonel Cavenagh to dispose of all these refugees—harder still to persuade them that all the wild stories with which they were full to bursting were nothing more than the figments of an excited imagination. But he contrived to dismiss them at last, and sent them back to their homes.—Extract from Kaye's "History of the Sepoy War," Vol. III.

THE PIANO-MÉCANIQUE.

DEBAIN Inventor.

A Piano on which any person, although unacquainted with Music, can perform the most difficult and elaborate Compositions with faultless execution and delicacy.

The Piano-Mécanique is actuated by means of planchettes (small boards), into which is pinned the Composition to be performed; and these planchettes are caused to travel on a metal plate which is fitted on the top of the Instrument. This metal plate is pierced in a straight line across its breadth by a series of small openings, up through which project the steel ends of the keys of a miniature keyboard, chromatically arranged. The pins of the planchette, coming in contact with the miniature keyboard, act on the keys in a similar manner as would the fingers of the hand.

The metal pins of the planchette vary in height according to the marks of expression, accent, etc., indicated by the composer, the highest producing the full force of blow from the hammer, and the lowest the most delicate. It will thus be seen that every conceit of the author can be copied, and afterwards mechanically rendered in all its integrity; in fact, execution quite beyond the manual dexterity of the most accomplished performer is, by this system, ensured.

The Piano-Mécanique, when compared with kindred Instruments, presents at once its advantages; notably:—Compositions can be played in their entirety, there being no necessity for mutilation to meet the capacities of the Instrument, nor curtailment to suit the circumference of a barrel; greater facility for selecting the Music to be performed, and its requiring much less space; its faultless execution and complete means of expression; the facility with which any single Composition may be obtained for it, and at small cost; its freedom from derangement, either by excessive use or from the extremes of climate; the advantage of a Seven-Octave Manual for ordinary use.

In proof of the success of the Piano-Mécanique, it may be stated that upwards of 3,000 Compositions, ranging from the simple Ballad or Dance to the difficult Fantasia, Overture, or Grand Symphony, have been arranged for it, and to these, additions are almost daily being made.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, January 3; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, January 1; Calcutta, December 31.

THE previous week in Calcutta was entirely taken up with the ceremonies and festivities of the Prince's visit. The Belvedere Garden Party, the Viceroy's Ball, the Illuminations, the Native Fête at Belgatchia Villa, and the Chapter of the Star of India, formed a chain of incidents which might well justify the Friend of India in saying that "the last seven days have certainly been the merriest the people of Calcutta, in their collective capacity, have ever spent since the year old Job Charnock first came sailing up the Hooghly." At the Native Fête, after the Prince was seated, a Pandit held before his Royal Highness a gold plate containing a cocoanut, a quantity of paddy or rice, a few blades of dhub grass, a gold coin, and flowers, as the national emblems of fertility, plenty, and wealth, and three Vedic students blessed the Prince in a Mantra from one of the Vedas. Another Pandit, with his two pupils, then chanted a hymn from the Sama Veda, and was followed by four native amateurs singing a welcome song in Bengali, and also a translation of the same into English, set to native music.

THEN followed a native concert, in the course of which Babu Kali Prasana Banaji played upon two flutes by "blowing with his neck;" so at least it was announced in the programme. After the Babu had salaamed to the Prince, he sat on the ground, and putting a flute on either side of his neck began to draw in his breath, and by some means or other caused the flutes to play. The flutes were handed up to the Royal party, who examined them rather curiously, Sir W. Gregory putting one against the side of his neck, but apparently to small purpose. After some vocal music by another Babu with instrumental accompaniment, and a trio on a sitar, came a natch by a group of native dancing girls, eight in number, richly dressed in silk and gold brocade, and profusely adorned with jewellery. They were accompanied by a native band. It would be interesting to know what his Royal Highness thought of the music. As to the natch, we hope he will bear up under the lectures which Dr. Duff and other mouthpieces of Mrs. Grundy have been reading him on that and other incidents of his travels.

WITH regard to the attack on Captain Butler's Survey party in the Naga Hills, we have yet to wait for full particulars. As yet we only know that on Christmas-day the savages attacked Captain Butler and his followers at a spot somewhere between Lakhuti and Pangti. Captain Butler was severely wounded by a spear in the right breast—a wound which afterwards proved mortal. The savages were, of course, repulsed, and the surveying party quietly pitched its tents on the scene of the outrage. The assailants in this case seem to have been some of those who attacked Captain Butler's party the year before. Allied with the Wokhas they had then attempted unsuccessfully to surprise the camp close to the Wokha village. Captain Butler retaliated by burning the village. It appears that the Wokhas had from the first been ill-disposed towards Captain Butler and his party. But the direct cause of hostilities was the murder of one of the camp servants, a Kuki coolie, who while collecting grass was decoyed away by the Wokhas and had his throat cut. Captain Butler demanded the surrender of the murderers, but the headmen of the village declined to give them up, and very shortly afterwards the Survey Camp was attacked.

THE reason why the Prince of Wales did not join the pig-sticking party from Calcutta was a swelling in his knee, to which he has been liable for some years past. As it did not prevent him from attending a ball on the 31st December, and dancing till three A.M., we may hope that his ailment was not of long duration. Another bit of news connected with the Prince's visit is the fact of his having consented to become the Patron of the new Indian Institute, the founding of which at Oxford is now being advocated in India by Professor Monier Williams. It is said that Sir R. Temple, Sir A. Arbuthnot, Sir D. Forsyth, and many others have already promised their support to the same project. Dr. Williams was Sir R. Temple's guest at Belvedere. As yet we do not hear of any contribution having been made to the Institute by natives of India; but, as the Pioneer remarks, "it must be borne in mind that Dr. Monier Williams's immediate object is, not so much to propound a cut-and-dry scheme which rich Rajahs and others will be invited to support, but to gather information." It should also be understood that the Institute is intended for the benefit of native Indian as well as English students, and in his address to the Puna Association Professor Williams dwelt very strongly on the advantages to young natives of a two or three years' residence at Oxford, adding the hope that rich natives might be induced to found scholarships, or in other ways contribute to the funds of the institution.

THE Indian papers mention the death of the Maharajah of Karauli, a little Rajput State on the right bank of the Chambal, once tributary to the Marátha Peshwa, whose rights were transferred to the English by the treaty of Puna in 1817. Jai-Singh Pal, who has died childless, was an intelligent, well-meaning ruler, who latterly got through a good deal of work himself. Succeeding to the chiefship in 1854, he rendered good service during the Mutiny, in return for which a dress of honour was conferred upon him, and his salute raised from fifteen to seventeen guns. He had also the right of adoption.

WE hear that MR. W. W. Hunter, who arrived in Bombay on the 18th December, after seeing his "Life of Lord Mayo" through the press, will remain in India for some months going about the country to see how the work of preparing the Presidency Gazetteers is making way. Besides these gazetteers, which when completed will form the most comprehensive and elaborate survey ever undertaken of any country, an Imperial Gazetteer is to be published on a reduced scale for general reference. The first part of the Imperial Gazetteer will probably be issued early in 1877.

A CALCUTTA correspondent of the Bombay Gazette deems it "a disgrace to the City of Palaces" not to have brought the railway over the river, since "an extension of a quarter of a mile is all that is wanted to make the approach to Calcutta one of the most picturesque in the world. As it is, one has to drive over the bridge in a broken down shigram very inconvenient and tiresome to the tired traveller." He was much pleased, however, with the Strand, a noble drive of two miles or so along the riverside, where "in the evening all Calcutta turns out, and the toute ensemble of the river crowded with shipping and the drive with carriages forms a magnificent spectacle." A house he visited in Russell-street, Chowringhee, "certainly deserves the name of palace, with its marble verandahs, magnificent stained wooden staircase, ball-room with polished floor, boudoir and other rooms all laid down with shining marble pavement, the furniture and appointments equal to any mansion in Belgravia." What the writer took for marble must have been merely the fine Chunam or plaster made of shells, which for hardness and polish might sometimes pass for marble itself.

WE learn from the Bombay Gazette that of the thirty-five lakhs lately remitted to India on account of the Nizam's State Loan effected in England, twenty-five lakhs will be invested in shares of a State Bank at Haidarabad. It is a curious thing, remarks our contemporary, "that, at the very moment when the Government of India is severing its connection with the Presidency Banks, on the ground of the difficulty the most careful of Governments must experience in maintaining an effectual control over the management of such institutions, the Haidarabad Government should be anxious to add to its responsibilities by undertaking an extensive banking business. The capital of the Bank is to consist of fifty lakhs of rupees; and the State will hold one-half of the whole, while of the remaining half ten lakhs will be reserved for the Haidarabad sowcars, and the balance of fifteen lakhs will be offered to the public of Bombay. It is probable, however, that the Bank will not restrict itself to mere operations in exchange. We look upon it as the nucleus of an extensive scheme for developing the mineral and other resources of the State of Haidarabad—a scheme which is legitimate and even laudable in its way, but which will drive the unhappy Government of India, mindful of past exploits of Haidarabad financiers, to its wits' end."

THE late murderous attack on the Superintendent of the Agra Jail can hardly, as the Pioneer remarks, have surprised any one familiar with the mode of enforcing prison discipline in India. The astonishing part of the matter is that attacks on superintendents and warders are so very rare. "In the Allahabad Jail—perhaps the largest in India—there are"—says the Pioneer—"or at any rate there were four or five months ago, only two European warders; the only other Europeans being the superintendent himself, and two or three supervisors over the various industries carried on in the jail. It is no doubt true that certain circumstances combine to secure peace within an establishment containing between 2,500 and 3,000 prisoners—perfect organisation, and the fact that only comparatively few of the prisoners belong to the worst classes. But among these last there is always a possibility of an outbreak; and the ease with which an attack may be made on a warder or superintendent will be evident to any one who has walked down the long corridor at Naini, on either side of which squat, in long rows, the fettered criminals convicted of murder and other foul crimes. Though fettered round the ankles and wrists, these convicts can use their arms, and even walk about. Under a sudden impulse of fury they might overpower a man with blows from their irons, before anybody could come to the rescue."

THE Times correspondent telegraphs some further details of the Prince of Wales's visit to Delhi and the Camp of Exercise. His entry into Delhi "was worthy of the Imperial occasion, but it may be that it partook rather too much of the character of a purely military ceremony, the entry of a conqueror. There was no music, indeed, to enliven the march, and so it could not be said there were strains of triumph. Next, there was nothing inside the lines of soldiery, extending for five miles, but uniforms, swords, lace, plumes, bayonets, lances. Outside sat the multitude on platforms, a crowd of authorities, Lord Napier, his hand resting in a bandage, the Staff of the Army, glittering in gold lace, orders, and medals, and strange uniforms. There was a guard of honour outside and an escort. All was pomp and circumstance which it would take too long to describe by electricity. When the Prince, in a Field-Marshal's uniform, had mounted, his Staff formed four abreast on horseback from left to right, three deep, in front; then Sir H. Davis, on the left of the Prince, and Lord Napier of Magdala on his right. Behind came Major Bradford, Lord Suffield, the Duke of Sutherland, and Lord A. Paget, on horseback abreast, and the rest of the suite in Royal carriages. As the Prince arrived a battery of the 19th Brigade fired a salute. From the railway station to Lothian-road, the 11th Bengal Lancers, 7th Bengal Cavalry, 15th Hussars, and 15th Bengal Cavalry were stationed, lining the road. The esplanade was lined by a battery of the C Brigade, C Battery 19th, A Battery 8th, B Battery 8th Brigade, and 6th Bengal Cavalry. In front of the exquisite Jamma Masjid were the 5th Regiment and the 28th Punjabi. As the Prince came in sight of the grand flight of steps leading to the grand gateway, the immense multitude, which had been sitting down, rose as by one accord. The effect was wonderful, like the bursting forth of innumerable flowers, for there were many hundreds of native gentlemen and European ladies waving parasols and kerchiefs, and the many coloured dresses and turbans were all revealed at once. The Chandni Chauk, or main street, was lined by the 31st Punjabis, 62nd Regiment, 5th and 26th Punjabis, 6th, 8th, and 85th Foot, 32nd Punjabis, 12th Foot, 15th Sikhs, and 45th Sikhs (Rattray's); and then came outside the 11th Hussars, 6th Bengal Cavalry, Central India Horse, 39th and 51st Foot, 8th Native Infantry, and then three batteries. On the ridge itself were no less than six green regiments, including the 1st Punjabis, the 60th Rifles, and the 2nd Gurkhas, opposite Hindu Rao's house, which they held during the siege, and where the Prince stopped and expressed his pleasure at seeing them. The 3rd Gurkhas and 4th Gurkhas came next; afterwards some Sappers and Miners, a Mountain Battery, 33rd and 11th Native Infantry, and the 73rd Regiment. From the ridge to the Camp the road was lined by the 28th Punjab Cavalry, 14th Bengal Lancers, 4th Bengal Cavalry, two batteries, and the 10th Hussars. The guard of honour at the railway consisted of 100 of the Rifle Brigade and 100 of Rattray's Sikhs. At the Prince's camp, the guard consisted of 100 of the Rifle Brigade and 100 of the 8th Native Infantry. The escort consisted of a battery of the A brigade, a squadron of the 10th Hussars, and one troop of the 4th Bengal Cavalry. The Chandni Chauk was crowded from basement to roof, and was gaily decorated. On the top of the ridge the Prince turned to look at the city, and passed slowly by the monument on the summit."

ON the 14th the manœuvres began. Expecting a collision between General Hardinge and Sir C. Reid some ten or twelve miles north of Delhi, the Prince and suite drove in the afternoon to Alipur, and rode towards the firing across the country; but it was clear that Sir C. Reid did not intend to fight in the open, and he scarcely made a show of defending the approaches north of the cross cut canal. Operations were begun by General Hardinge making a clever dash at a bridge over the cross-cut on the Karnal road. Mounting eighty Infantry on gun-carriages, he moved down on it as fast as he could go along eight miles of road, halted his guns, advanced his Infantry, and opened fire on two guns, covered by a regiment of Cavalry, which Sir C. Reid had sent to seize the bridge, but who had neither crossed nor destroyed it. Reid's outpost fell back, Hardinge seized the bridge, and a pontoon bridge was soon laid nearly alongside it, to make the most of the Karnal road, the bridges on the old Imperial road, on the right of it, being bad and the country under water. There was no fighting, for "Reid was determined to stick to the ridge whereon he gained well-deserved honour, so he fell back on a tremendous line, intrenched himself here and there, called in his outposts, and left all the villages in front of Hardinge to be occupied without any struggle."

ABOUT 10 A.M. on the 15th the Prince's suite were galloping over the plain towards the Jumna to see a Cavalry fight, for General Watson had obtained leave from General Hardinge to take all his six regiments and two troops to his left and engage Miller's Horse. "There was a pretty but dusty charge executed by two regiments, but it did not occur until his Royal Highness had ridden away to the eastward, attracted by heavy firing, caused by Hardinge's advance and successful occupation of the villages in front. The charge, however, was not fortunate. There were certain 40-pounders of Reid's posted on the far flank of Watson's Horse, as they advanced in column, and they were also exposed to the fire of field batteries, and the Umpires adjudged that he had lost heavily, and put some of his squadrons out of action. Great disappointment was experienced by the cavalry officers, who were stopped in full career by the imperious Umpires with a positive assurance that certains puffs of smoke in the remote distance had put man and horse to rout and death. . . . Meanwhile Hardinge's advance continued till he reached the angle of two roads of Delhi and the junction with the canal in front of the ridge. He then found it would be impossible for him to carry out his project, and General Stuart, to whom he gave over the Infantry, considered he might still effect his object and establish himself on the ridge. Hardinge saw that he must renounce his project of massing his force on the right and carrying the Subji Mandi; indeed, he was in danger, as it is said that Sir C. Reid declared that had not the hour for suspending operations arrived before he could put his men in motion, he would have attacked Hardinge." Soon after 1 P.M. the firing suddenly ceased along the line, save where the guns from Reid's right swept the plain towards the villages in front. The action was over, and General Hardinge frankly acknowledged himself checkmated.

BEFORE leaving Delhi the Prince of Wales reviewed the whole of the cavalry in the Camp. On the morning of the 18th his Royal Highness reached Lahor, and was received at the railway station by the Lieutenant-governor, the Judges, and other high officials. He was also welcomed by a large gathering of Europeans. On the plateau facing the fort were a number of feudatory chiefs mounted on elephants, and attended by their sirdars, retinues, and followers, forming a most picturesque spectacle. The route to Government House was tastefully decorated, and was lined partly by the troops of the native Princes and partly by the garrison forces. The crowd, which was not numerous, gave his Royal Highness a cordial reception. On arriving at Government House the Prince received addresses from the Municipality and the Masonic body. He afterwards visited the Jail and released thirty prisoners. A ball given the same night in honour of the Prince was largely attended, and was a great success. His Royal Highness danced till late. On the 19th he returned the visits of the Rajahs of Kapurthalla, Nabha, and Bhawalpur, and opened a soldiers' industrial exhibition at Mian Mir. Answering the General's address, the Prince expressed his pleasure in opening the Exhibition. He dwelt upon the great benefits and the delight felt in promoting institutions where the results of the soldier's industry and the good use of his leisure might be exhibited to his comrades and the public. In conclusion, his Royal Highness expressed his regret at the absence of Lord Napier of Magdala. In the afternoon his Royal Highness held a levee, and received visits from the principal rajahs, after which he visited the fort, Ranjit Singh's palace and tomb, and other objects of interest. A grand ball was given in honour of the Royal visit that night.

THE Prince of Wales arrived at Jammu, in the Kashmir highlands, on January 20, and was met seven miles outside the town by the Maharajah. The route from the River Tawi to the town was lined by the Maharajah's troops in very picturesque uniforms, some of them wearing chain-mail in the old Sikh fashion, others cuirasses and helmets, and many of the rest antique, gaudy costumes. The procession formed a splendid pageant, surpassing anything of the kind yet witnessed. Numerous native bands played the National Anthem, and salutes were fired at different stages. Dusk set in after reaching the gate, when the town was brilliantly illuminated with lamps and blue lights. The Prince met with a respectfully cordial welcome from the people assembled to witness his arrival. His Royal Highness was conducted to a splendid palace specially built for his reception. On reaching it the Prince proceeded to the terrace, and witnessed a display of fireworks. The effect of the landscape lit up for miles around was very striking. After dinner there was some Natch dancing. His Royal Highness continues to enjoy excellent health. Lord Carington, Lord Aylesford, and Lord Suffield remained at Lahor, indisposed.

THE Prince dined at the Old Palace of Jammu on Friday, and afterwards witnessed a display of fireworks and an extraordinary dance of Lamas from Ladak. He proceeded to Wazirabad on Saturday morning, and took breakfast with the officers of the 9th Lancers. At Sialkot his Royal Highness opened the Chenab Bridge—a splendid structure—9,300 feet long—in the presence of a large company. After the ceremony he presided at a railway banquet. His Royal Highness reached Lahor in the evening, the town being brilliantly illuminated, and after dining he attended a grand native fête. He proceeded to Amritsar, en route for Agra to-day.

A DESPATCH of the 13th January from Achin has been received at the Hague, announcing that the Dutch forces have occupied the positions of Bitallamtermin and Sambong, and continue to advance. The inhabitants of those districts and their chief Lampager appear disposed to offer their submission. The district of Mukim is now entirely in possession of the Dutch.

TELEGRAMS received in St. Petersburg from Tashkand state that order prevails in Namanghan and its neighbourhood. General Scobeleff had crossed the Narin river without encountering any opposition. A detachment of troops under Colonel Baron Möller-Zakomelsky, while reconnoitring on the Andijan Road near Sirmak, was surprised by a party of the inhabitants. The assailants were, however, defeated. A reconnoitring expedition was expected to proceed to Upper Zarafshan about the middle of the present month.

A TELEGRAM received at the Admiralty on Wednesday last from the Commander-in-Chief on the China station states that the operations against the Malays in the Perak river have been altogether successful; and that the completeness of our success renders it no longer necessary to maintain the Naval Brigade, the men forming which will now be withdrawn and embarked on board their respective ships.

A TELEGRAM from Sir W. Jervois, to Lord Carnarvon, states that Sir William returned to Singapore from Penang and Malacca on the 20th January. At the beginning of this month he had obtained information that Ismail and some followers were in the mountains near the source of the Perak River. He immediately sent a body of armed police and trusted Malays under Mr. Hewick to communicate with Che Karim, a friendly chief at Solama, and to obtain his co-operation in surprising and, if possible, taking the party. He had since learnt by telegram from Penang that Ismail, with most of his people, escaped with the loss of four men killed, two wounded, and three captured. Seventeen elephants were also taken. Pandak Indut, the actual murderer of Birch, was amongst the killed; also one of Ismail's chief rajahs. A Reuter's telegram from Penang tells us that Superintendent Hewick, with 120 friendly Malays, has returned from the interior of Perak, after incurring great dangers in seeking for prisoners. Rajah Kadda has been killed while enlisting hostile Patani men. Ismail was warned, and escaped.

INTELLIGENCE received at Penang on Jan. 21 from Perak announces that the troops have attacked the village of Rathalma with artillery and rockets. The Malays fled. The troops afterwards burnt the place. There were no losses on the British side.

A HONG KONG telegram of Jan. 20 states that Mr. Grosvenor and his party reached Chingkiang, in the Province of Yunnan, on the 30th of December.

ACCORDING to the Times telegram Mr. Grey has arrived at Lucknow, having nearly recovered. Jung Bahadur's son was left behind at Delhi, ill of dysentery. Captain Glyn also is indisposed, but is getting better.

Butler, whose death was mentioned in our last issue. After six years of regimental duty Captain Butler in 1867 was appointed to the Assam Commission. In his new post he worked so well and gained such distinction that in 1869 he was appointed to succeed the late Captain Gregory as Political Agent in the Naga Hills, which divide Assam from Burmah. From the very first he threw his whole soul into the work. "Possessing a powerful frame and a commanding manner, he rapidly gained the respect of the manly though savage people among whom his lot was cast, at the same time that, by even-handed justice, he secured their esteem. Able to walk forty miles at a stretch on the hills, he could tire out the strongest Naga, and when at his desk he could compete with any man in application to the drudgery of office work." His favourite project was to get his district thoroughly surveyed; and, when his prayer was granted, he led successive expeditions into countries hitherto unknown, "in most of which expeditions he had to play the part of a daring and astute General, as well as Political Agent." In the session of 1874-75 he led a party in concert with that under the ill-fated Lieut. Holcombe, and on the murder of that officer he was selected to accompany the retributory force as Political Officer. This cold season, much to the surprise of all who knew his worth, he was not allowed to command the Survey Expedition, but only ordered to accompany it as Political Officer, because the Commander-in-Chief objected to placing troops under the command of an officer in civil employ. He was to have started for the interior of the hills in November last. How he came by his death is still unknown, but "his fearlessness in exposing himself, and his anxiety to avoid bloodshed, which often caused him to run to the front with a flag of truce, thereby rendering himself an easy mark to his savage adversaries," lead Major Johnstone to think that "he lost his life by some misadventure, and not in fair fight."

IT was but the other day that we announced the appointment of Sir Alfred Wilde to a seat in the Council of India; and now we have to report another vacancy caused by the retirement of one of the oldest remaining Councillors, Sir George Clerk, K.C.B., and G.C.S.I. The last two or three years have witnessed great changes in the composition of the Council which replaced in 1858 the old Board of East India Directors. Of the old school of Company's officers, civil and military, Sir George was one of the ablest and most distinguished representatives. An old Bengal civilian, Mr. George Clerk was Governor-General's Agent on the North-Western Frontier, when the Kabul disasters in 1842 brought out in sharp and prominent relief the high qualities of a statesman equal to the sorest need. To him belonged the credit, not only of selecting Henry Lawrence for one of his assistants, but of keeping the Sikh Court at Lahor true to its engagements with the Indian Government, and of hurrying forward through all kinds of hindrances and discouragements the preparations for Pollock's victorious march to Kabul. For such pre-eminent services Mr. Clerk was promoted to the Government of Agra, that is, of the North-Western Provinces, from which he retired with a knighthood in 1848. His next post of dignity and usefulness was the Governorship of Bombay, but failing health soon cut short his tenure of an office in which he might else have done great things. Some years later he went to the Cape as Commissioner to settle important boundary disputes. During the Mutiny he was again at home as Secretary to the Board of Control. Sir George strove hard but vainly against the amalgamation of the Indian and English Armies. In 1860 he again held for too short a time the Government of Bombay. Not long afterwards he became a member of the Indian Council, from which he now retires, full of years and honour, to give way to some younger, but hardly to a better man.

LORD LYTTON, the Viceroy elect of India, arrived in London from Lisbon on Wednesday last. Lord Napier of Magdala has been appointed Governor of Gibraltar.

THE Indian Government has lost no time in acting on the concession wrested from the King of Burmah touching the despatch of an armed escort through his dominions. We learn by telegram from Rangoon that two hundred European and a hundred native troops have been detailed for an escort to Mr. Stuart to Bhamo on receipt of orders from the Resident at Mandalay.

MAJOR H. L. HAWKINS, who was killed on Jan. 4, after sharing, under Brigadier general Ross and a small party, in the capture of a village on the Perak River, was posted as Ensign to the 30th Regiment of Bengal N.I. in 1853, and became Lieutenant in 1856. He served at the siege and capture of Kotah in 1858, and commanded a detachment of Mayne's Horse at the action of Seekur in 1859. He became a Major in 1873.

COLONEL A. C. PLOWDEN, of the Bengal Staff Corps, whose death on furlough was lately announced, entered the Bengal Army in 1837, served against the insurgents in Bundelkhand in 1842, and in the second Sikh campaign of 1848 49, including the siege and surrender of Multan. During the Indian Mutiny campaign he commanded a division of the Gurkha army under Sir Jung Bahadur. He engaged and defeated the rebels at Pipraich, Shahganj, and other places, and assisted at the siege and capture of Lucknow, after which event he succeeded to the command of the Gurkha army, conducting it throughout Oudh to Segauli, and occupying on the way Faizabad, which surrendered on the approach of the Gurkha force. Since 1861 he had served in the Bengal Stud Department. He became a Colonel in 1869.

WE are glad to see that the success which attended the Castalia's trips across the Channel last season has emboldened her owners to make a fresh appeal to the public in aid of their endeavours to utilise the principle of Captain Dicey's twinship. The results hitherto achieved are shown by the fact that during the nineteen days of August last, when the Castalia commenced her regular Channel service, she carried a daily average of thirty-eight passengers, whereas in September the daily average was sixty-four, in October one hundred and fifteen, and in November she carried at the rate of one hundred and fifty-nine per day. The great increase of passengers in the last two months was probably owing in some measure to the example set by the Prince and Princess of Wales. Nothing is wanting to the complete success of this experiment but the construction of another twinship with greater steam-power. In view of the help which the public are invited to give to an end so desirable, we may note that preliminary arrangements have been made with one of the largest shipbuilders in England for the construction of a new ship with a guaranteed speed of not less than fourteen knots per hour, and with such other improvments as experience has shown to be advisable.

IT appears to be settled that Lord Napier will proceed to take up the post of Governor of Gibraltar on his retirement from the Indian command.

COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS FOR THE CIVIL SERVICE.—That influence as well as education is a stepping-stone to natives seeking Government or other situations, an illustration was offered (says a native paper, the Dnyan Prakash) some days ago in Poona. There was a vacancy in the District Court of Poona of a writer on a salary of Rs. 25. There were thirty applicants for the situation. Of these two were Government servants, eighteen matriculated students, and of the rest some five had submitted to the Little-Go Examination three or four times. The applications being so numerous it was rather a difficult matter to select one to fill up the place. There was no other alternative but to subject them all to an examination in which portions of a minute by Sir Michael Westropp and an indenture were set for translation. Now if for the ordinary writership of Rs. 25 the candidates were put to such a test, it is difficult to say what might be the ordeal for a head clerkship.

THE LATE DR. WILSON.—The Senate of the Bombay University have passed the following resolutions concerning the late Dr. Wilson:—"1. That this University place on record its deep and unfeigned regret at the death of the Rev. John Wilson, D.D., F.R.S., one of the Fellows mentioned in the Act of Incorporation, late Vice-Chancellor, and for several years and at his death Dean and Syndic in Arts. In its foundation on a sound and permanent basis, in the preparation of those rules and regulations which were necessary for carrying out the objects for which it was established, in the prominent part he took in the examinations for its prizes and honours, and in the constant attendance he gave to the meetings of its various governing bodies, Dr. Wilson showed the great and never-failing interest he took in this Institution—the success of which is in no small degree due to the able advice and fostering care of this great and good man; and while lamenting his removal, the University would point to the bright example of his life and conversation as a pattern to be followed by all engaged in the work of education, as well as by those who profit thereby. 2. That although Dr. Wilson's memory will be preserved in the University by the "Wilson Philological Lectureship," which was founded in his honour in the year 1870, yet as that testimonial was provided by friends and admirers of Dr. Wilson outside of the University, it would, in the opinion of this meeting, be specially appropriate that the Senate as such should in some manner to be hereafter determined, commemorate the distinguished services rendered by Dr. Wilson to this University."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, January 24, 1876.

MAJORS OF THE INDIAN ORDNANCE CORPS.

THE case of the Majors of the Scientific Corps serving in India between July, 1872, and April, 1875, as put forth in the statement now before us, is one of such manifest hardship that we are lost in wonder at the obstinate withholding of full reparation for the wrong done. In the statement itself the facts of the question at issue between the aggrieved officers and the India Office are set down with unanswerable clearness, and the case for the officers gathers fresh strength from the entire absence of rhetorical comment. In July, 1872, the First Captains of Engineers and Artillery were by Royal Warrant turned into Majors, in order that the officer commanding a battery should hold his proper position in relation to the other branches of the service. In the Home Army the new majors at once received the pay of their new rank. But officers of the same rank serving in India were denied the pecuniary advantages of their changed position. Majors in name only, they continued to draw the pay of captains, on the plea that the profits reaped from their contract allowances more than made up the difference in their pay. Their claims to redress were supported by Lord Napier, and in 1873 the Indian Government recommended the grant of the higher pay accompanied by the abolition of the contract system. Majors of Engineers, it was added, received no contract allowances whatever, while the profits of the Artillery officers were likely to disappear on active service. The officers themselves pleaded that, in the matter of contracts, they had performed the work for which they had been ordered to contract. These allowances moreover had no necessary connection with the pay of a first captain; they were drawn by the officer commanding a battery, whatever his rank might be, and the profit resulting from the discharge of special duties could not be taken into account in a question of increased pay.

In April, 1874, the Indian Government urged this point on Lord Salisbury as a reason for granting the higher rates of pay. "As officers"—they wrote—"have been given a certain rank, they not unnaturally look to receive the pay of that rank, and the reply that the higher pay is not given because they are assumed to make a certain profit out of battery contracts will never be satisfactory to those concerned." In the same despatch the Indian Government admitted that the profits from the contracts averaged only a fourth of the allowances. In other words, a Major of Horse Artillery in India might gain about £237 a year by his contracts against a loss of £439 in respect of his pay; while the Major of a Field Battery would find the balance against him nearly as heavy; that is, he would be worse off than a major of infantry by nearly £200 a year. Lord Salisbury himself admitted the right of the claimants to the full pay of their rank. But it was not till last year that the pay of their rank was conceded to the Indian Majors, nor was the concession allowed to take effect before the 1st April, 1875, from which date the contract allowances also were to cease. It was thus virtually admitted that the new Majors were entitled to the pay of their rank. But if they were so entitled last year, why not in 1872? It may be contended that the higher pay was only an equivalent for the surrender of the contracts. To this the plain answer is that the contract allowances had nothing to do with the question of rank and pay. They had been granted for a special pupose not to First Captains as such, but to the officer, whether Captain or Subaltern, in charge of a battery, and the profit he made for them was his recognised perquisite for the work done by him as contractor. It was admitted, as we saw, by the Indian authorities that the average profit still left the new Majors short of their proper pay and allowances by about £200 a year each, while those Majors of Engineers who had no contracts, nor consolidated pay from the Public Works Department, have been losers by twice that amount. In strict justice, every officer promoted by the Warrant of July, 1872, should get back the difference —say £350 to £400 a year—between Captain's and Major's pay from July, 1872, to April, 1875. But a near approach to justice might at least be made by giving each claimant the balance of actual money loss during that period, after reckoning up his gains from contracts and other sources. This is the least that any righteous Government can do. The plea sometimes urged, that Royal Warrants do not run in India, is at once set aside by reference to the recent practice of Indian Governments. The Warrants of 1867 and 1873 for example, which increased the British soldier's pay by twopence a day and otherwise improved his position, were both carried out in India with effect from the date of issue in this country.

LAND TENURES.—II.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I ought to apologise to your non-official readers for asking them to discuss so dry a subject as that of land tenures, but they will acknowledge hereafter, if not now, that this subject is of vital importance, and intimately connected with the peace and welfare of India; and if they have kinsmen or kinswomen in that country, or any shares in Indian railways or in tea, coffee, or indigo plantations, or any interest in Indian Four per Cent. Government Securities, their worldly comfort is concerned in forcing Parliament to respect customs which Sir Henry Maine has shown should be the basis of our Administration in India.

The Rajpoots (Kshatriyas) have a tradition that they are to possess the soil of the Gangetic plain from Behar (Maghadha) to Sirhind, and from Fyzabad Oudh to Mirta Oodeypoor and Gujarat. To secure their possession uninterruptedly they have a custom, in obedience to which no stranger, either of their own caste, or of any other caste, can become a shareholder. Formerly, whenever a mortgage was effected, it was to one of the co-shareholders of the village, who was also a kinsman, and ready to be a fellow-soldier in times of trouble.

The village communities persistently refused to allow even Kshatriyas of a different clan to gain any footing in their respective villages. It is well known that a Rajpoot father usually aspires to marry his daughter to a man of another clan of higher rank than his own; but his son-in-law was formerly never allowed to own a foot of land in his father-in-law's village. Indeed, the landholders of Pergunah Bidjeygurh unanimously rose in rebellion in December, 1857, not because they had any dislike to the British (I do not believe that any of the Chundele Kshatriyas would have hurt me if I had fallen into their hands), but because they were furious with their widowed Queen for having executed a deed of gift of the land in favour of her son-in-law.

The instinct of Kshatriyas, or the wisdom of their lawgivers has urged them to prevent any interference by any stranger with the affairs of the village community; but the British Government has refused to recognise their ancient customs, and has acted on the principle that an embarrassed shareholder should have perfect liberty to transfer his share to anybody he pleases, whether that person be an usurer, a harlot, or a gambler, who hopes, by sowing dissension among the members of the village community, to acquire gradually by Champerty and by other dodges the proprietary right to the whole village.

We should carefully bear in mind the fact that two qualifications used to be required for shareholders in a Rajpoot village community as long as the latter continued to be a durable institution—

1st. Kinsmanship, learnedly described by Sir Henry Maine in my quotation on the 28th ultimo.

2ndly. Ability to perform military service insisted on by Schlegel as indissolubly connected with the idea of property in land.

Now usurers, even of the priest caste, can never be legitimate kinsmen of the Kshatriyas, neither have I ever met with a mahajun moneylender qualified to perform military service.

Young candidates for the Indian Civil Service are, I believe, recommended to study Sir H. Sumner Maine's writings. How astonished will they be on reaching India to find how diligently the local Governments have been destroying the system of village communities which Sir Henry has shown to have been recognised as the basis of administration by the most beneficent systems of government. Sir Henry has compared the land tenures in Russia with those which formerly existed in Behar and in the North-West Provinces, and which still exist in Rajpootana.

In the assumption of an agnatic connection between the villagers, in the blending of personal rights with privileges of ownership, and in a variety of spontaneous provisions for internal administration, the Russian village appears to be a nearly exact repetition of the Indian community; but there is one important difference which we note with the greatest interest. The co-owners of an Indian village, though their property is blended, have their rights distinct, and this separation of rights is complete and continues indefinitely. The severance of rights is also theoretically complete in a Russian village, but there it is only temporary. After the expiration of a given, but not in all cases of the same, period, separate ownerships are extinguished, the land of the village is thrown into a mass, and then it is redistributed among the families composing the community, according to their number. This repartition having been effected, the rights of families and of individuals are again allowed to branch out into various lines, which they continue and follow till another period of division comes round.—Maine's "Ancient Law," page 267, fourth edition, 1870.

The periodical repartition of lands according to the means of cultivating them, which custom the yeomen of India as well as the peasantry of Russia formerly observed, is the necessary consequence of absence of capital. As long as a shareholder does not possess capital, the death of plough cattle and other misfortunes oblige him to return to the village corporation some of his fields.

The system of village communities in India was formerly similar to that which exists in Russia, but it was modified, as described by Sir H. Maine, for the purpose of creating individual rights in the land, while at the same time the interest of members in the corporate welfare of the village republic was preserved. Strangers who were likely to sow discord were still excluded, but valuable proprietary rights were created which do not yet exist in Russia.

I would once more urge that the honourable way of relieving the embarrassments of the noble Kshatriyas is not by making laws having for their object the confiscation of rights which have been, by British Courts of Justice, assured to their creditors, but by the formation of a Militia supported by Jaghires and commanded by British officers. Such a Militia could successfully defend India from external enemies, and from the robbers and Pindaris who are always ready to engage in schemes of spoliation.—Your obedient servant, T.

A SHIP ON SHORE.—The ship River Clyde, 499 tons, iron barque, belonging to Messrs. Hargrove, Fergusson, and Jackson, of Liverpool, to the consignment of Messrs. Gordon, Woodroffe and Co., is reported on shore, off the Coleroon river, near Porto Novo. The assistance of the B.I.S.N. steamer Goa, now due from the Southern ports, has been procured, and she proceeds to help the River Clyde at once. The barque was just completing her voyage from Middleborough to Porto Novo, with railway material.—Cochin Argus.

IRRIGATION IN THE BENGAL PRESIDENCY.—IV.

Now, if this is a necessary state of things,—if a yearly loss is an inherent condition of future canal undertakings in any part of India —then, in any part of India, undertakings of the kind can only be justified by political or philanthropic considerations. What these are we have shown. It is for statesmen to say, in view of the condition of the finances of the country, whether they are such as to justify such unremunerative outlay. At all events it is patent, on the above assumption, that the Indian Government has no right to include such undertakings under the head of "Reproductive Works," to be constructed with loans, the interest on which they will repay.

It is, however, affirmed that this defect of unproductiveness is by no means inherent in irrigation schemes—but merely in permanent canals, with heads carried up to the Himalayas, or taken out from vast works of the nature of the Soane weir. Whether perennial irrigation cannot be obtained without these, or, in other words, whether their construction does not argue an indifference to the first of the desiderata stated in the commencement of this paper, viz., that the land to be commanded should be reached with the least possible expenditure—is a matter which will be discussed hereafter. But the first question is, whether perennial irrigation is in itself an absolute requisite,—whether to insist upon it at all costs is not the result of a decision too hastily arrived at upon the second of the desiderata before specified.

The India Office Blue-book, already quoted, says, "General Strachey, in 1867, recorded an opinion that the remedy for inconveniences caused to cultivators by uncertain water supply, never under control, was the substitution of perennial for intermittent inundation canals." General Strachey here gave utterance to the sentiment which had led us, on the annexation of the Punjab, to ignore the native method of irrigation and to put in hand the costly Bari Doab Canal, which irrigates at this moment an acreage but one-sixth larger (on an average of five years) than that of Sawun Mull's Lower Sutlej and Chinab Series. His opinion was given apropos of a meeting of the revenue officers of those southern districts of the Punjab that are irrigated by inundation canals, who placed on record resolutions strongly urging the further development of irrigation upon this inexpensive principle;—pointing out that the inundation system was one by which irrigation was cheaply and speedily obtained, that it sufficiently served the purposes of cultivation, and that it paid. The Ganges Canal was six years under construction. It was nine years before the upper division even of the Bari Doab Canal was opened (four years of this delay was, however, owing to the rebellion). For the actual net-outlay on the latter, exclusive of interest (£1,344,956), 19 first-class inundation canals could have been constructed in the same time, irrigating more than a million and-a-half acres—or six times the average acreage of the Bari Doab Canal (see pp. 99-102 for details of the above figures)—and which coming into play year by year as they were constructed, would, most of them, have been paying a return upon their outlay before the Bari Doab could even have commenced to work.

No doubt the million and a half acres so irrigated would have been land where irrigation by wells was feasible, and the engineering principle is to give canal irrigation where well irrigation is not feasible. But the revenue officers take exception to this principle. They point out that in the other Doabs of the Punjab, besides the Bari Doab, there are seven millions of acres of land, of which the proportion irrigated by wells is but small, but, were the wells supplemented by inundation canals, their acreage would be at once quintupled—to the great political and fiscal advantage of the Government. They point out, moreover, that well irrigation not supplemented by canal irrigation is, in tracts like these where the auxiliary rainfall is of small account, too costly to be very remunerative to the cultivators; and that it is not likely to be extended unless so supplemented. Well irrigation costs on an average 30s. an acre initial charges, and 14s. an acre maintenance expenses. Inundation canal irrigation should cost, at the outside, 20s. an acre initial expenditure (see estimate at p. 101), and 1s. 6d. an acre for maintenance. The Upper Sutlej series, the most expensive of those under the Punjab Irrigation Department, shows an average 205 cubic feet of annual excavation per acre, which at the high average of 5s. per mile represents a shilling an acre on this account. Fourpence an acre should cover all administrative charges (those on the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series average 4s. 0½d., but those on the Bhawalpore series only 3s. 0½d. per acre). Twopence an acre is thus left for contingencies.

Consequently if a well, irrigating thirty acres, is enabled by canal assistance to mature 150 acres of crops, the initial charges on the whole acreage become 26s. and the maintenance charges 4s. 3½d. Charging interest on the capital at 6 per cent. (the rate at which the Government advances money to the cultivators for the construction of wells), we find the minimum yearly cost to the cultivator of irrigation by wells, supplemented by inundation canals, to be 5s. 10¼d. per acre, or about eightpence under the present cost of irrigation on the perennial canals, and only two fifths of the cost of irrigation by wells alone. The cultivators on the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series paid upon all accounts for their canal irrigation in 1873-74 3s. 5d. an acre (average); add to this 2s. 9½d. (the maintenance charges of a well spread over 150 acres), and 4¼d. (the interest charges of a well spread over 150 acres), and the total is 6s. 6½d. The difference between this and the minimum of 5s. 10¼d., above stated, or 8½d., is the difference between 3s. 5d. charged for canal irrigation to the cultivator, and 2s. 8½d., the actual cost thereof to Government per acre (viz. 1s. 2½d. interest at 6 per cent. on 20s. capital cost per acre, and 1s. 6d. cost of maintenance per acre) It is thus clear profit after paying the interest on capital cost of the canal, and represents a net return on the same of 3 5 per cent., or a total return thereon, taking credit for the 1s. 2½ l. interest, of 9 5 per cent. (3 5 and 6 per cent.

But we have before seen that the return of this series for 1873 74 was 13·4 per cent., even after getting rid of the misrepresentations under which the Government reports showed it as returning 105 per cent. The difference is the measure of the extent to which we have overcharged it. Part of this overcharge is, no doubt, in the assumed initial cost and maintenance charge of the wells, which for safety sake have been placed at outside figures. But the main overcharge is in estimating the interest on 20s. an acre as capital cost of the canal irrigation. In fact, canals costing that amount on their irrigated acreage would, if well designed, return more than 3s. 5d. an acre; they would, by the quality of their work, their ample and constant irrigation, justify charges for water-rate and enhanced land revenue reaching 5s. an acre. The net profit on this would be (deducting 2s. 8½d. as before for the cost to Government per acre of the irrigation) 11·46 per cent, and the total return, taking credit for interest on capital, 17½ per cent. (11·46 and 6 per cent.)

The total average cost to the cultivator of the irrigation of their crops by well (3s. 1¾d., see p. 52) and Canal (5s., as above assumed) would in this case reach 8s. 1¾d., and it has been before explained (p. 45) that this is a price which can be easily paid for, high irrigation permitting of the cultivation of a good proportion of such staples as indigo, sugar cane and rice. However, 17½ per cent. direct return in water rate and enhanced land revenue is doubtless a high standard, —nor is it necessary to reach it to validate the reasons which influenced the Revenue officers, before mentioned, in recording the resolutions which were disregarded by the Government indifference to the opinion of General Strachey, before quoted.

But General Strachey considered that the inconveniences to the cultivator of inundation irrigation are such as to require remedy by rendering the canals perennial. Let us proceed to convert the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series into perennial canals, after the method accepted in the Irrigation Department. These canals have their heads upon two rivers, but for convenience let us assume those upon the Sutlej to be on the right bank of the Chinab, opposite to the canals on the left bank of that river. General Strachey's principle would then be to construct a weir and head works of two channels led off down either bank of the river to take up the heads of all the canals and feed them at a high level. When such a work was proposed to be constructed upon the Sutlej at Ferozpore, in a similar view with regard to the Upper Sutlej series, the cost of the weir and head works was estimated by Colonel Anderson, the originator of the scheme, at £633,056. Other practical men have placed it at nearer a million sterling. Let us, however, accept the estimate, and assume that this weir and headworks would suffice for canals of treble the irrigated acreage of the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series, or 643,896 acres. It follows that one third only of the estimated cost of the weir and headworks, or £211,017 should be charged in this calculation; to this must, however, be added the cost of two trunks, 100 feet wide each, at the head, and aggregating 60 miles in length, to carry the supply for the canals whose heads are taken up. A calculation too long to detail here gives the probable cost of these at £105,511. We have therefore to add a total charge of £316,528 for improvements, giving perennity of flow, to the capital cost before found for the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series (£127,380), and then to estimate the result to the Government and to the cultivators.

Eight shillings per acre has been accepted as the possible average price per acre for perennial irrigation, in place of 6s. 6d., the present average price. The charge for inundation irrigation may very certainly be enhanced in the same proportion of 23 per cent.—for, as before mentioned (p. 45), the average value of produce on the two systems of irrigation differs only by 1s. 3d., or 4 per cent., and may therefore be taken at 4s. 2½d. per acre (average). The cost of maintenance of perennial canals varies considerably, being as high as 3s. 2½d. per acre on the Bari Doab Canal, but the Chief Engineer of the North-West Provinces considers that it should exceed 25 per cent. on revenue. On inundation canals, as already shown, it should not exceed 1s. 6d. an acre, and such indeed is the average of the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series, but the short irrigation of 1873 74 raised this average to 1s. 8 l. per acre, which we will, for safety, accept. Thus 4s. 2½d.—1s. 8 l. the possible net income per acre of the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series, as inundation canals, is raised by the weir to 8s. 2 l., the possible net-income as perennial canals. This increase, for 214,632 acres, the average irrigated acreage of the series, is £37,113. This acreage is already five-sixths of that watered by the Bari Doab Canal at a cost of £2,222,148, and it would be rash to expect any great extension of it by the perennity afforded. Assuming, however, an increase of 20 per cent., or 42,926 acres, we gain, at 8s. 2d. as before, £12,876 additional, or a total result, from an outlay of £316,528, of £49,989.

On the other hand, £316,528 laid out in high class inundation irrigation at 20s. per acre (see estimate at p. 101) would irrigate 316 528 acres of land, independent of the area irrigated by the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series, which at 5s.—1s. 6d. (the rate accepted at p. 54) would give a return of £55,392. Moreover, in affording a net increase of cultivated area of 273,602 acres (being 316 528—62,926) the new canals not only confer a political benefit, but also cause a cash return to the Government apart from their own revenue. For besides what a cultivator pays on account of irrigation there is a demand incident to all cultivated land called the unirrigated rate, which may be assumed on an average for the whole Punjab at 4d. an acre. This rate on £273,602 acres, amounting to £4,560, must be added to the return of the new canals in a comparison of their advantages with those of affording perennity to the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series by a weir. The total advantages to Government from the outlay of the £316,528 on new canals in preference to the weir becomes thus £9,963 (55,392 by 4,560—49,989). The calculation has throughout been studiously in favour of the permanent work, and for safety's sake every assumption has been taken against the inundation canals. Nevertheless, the result is that the same sum of money applied to making existing inundation canals (represented by the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series) perennial—will, by means of a weir, return 3 18 per cent. less than if laid out upon new inundation canals, while the latter will increase cultivated area by 273,602 acres redeemed from the waste.

Evidently, then, there is a point at which high class irrigation ceases to be profitable for the Government, but then General Strachey speaks in the interests of the cultivators. The revenue officers certainly say that the fluctuations of good and bad years upon inundation canals are merely those incidental to agriculture in all countries. That no loss or inconvenience is entailed upon the agriculturist against which he would be disposed to insure himself by a permanent increase in the cost of his cultivation, simply because the loss by the latter would infinitely exceed the occasional shortcomings of return consequent on short irrigation by the canals. General Strachey, however, decided that perennity of supply was to the advantage of the agriculturist. Now the returns for 1873-74 show the average gross value of produce per acre upon this series as being £1. 11s. 0 l. per acre, and upon the Bari Doab £1. 12s. 3 l. per acre. Take for both the cost of water and value of produce existing on the latter, and we find that the cultivators on the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series, when those canals are made perennial by means of a weir, will pay 3s. 2¾d. (6s. 7¾d. Bari Doab Canal rate, 3s. 5d. Lower Sutlej and Chinab series rate) more for their water, and only get 1s. 3d. increase (£1. 12s. 3d. Bari Doab Canal average, £1. 11s. 0d. Lower Sutlej and Chinab series average) in their produce. In other words, the measure of the benefit conferred by General Strachey would be 1s. 11¾d. per acre. or, if the maximum rates of 8s. and 4s. 2½d per acre be assumed, 2s. 6½d. per acre.

No doubt the cultivator can afford to pay 8s. on an acre producing him £1. 12s. 3d. But his acre can yield this when irrigated by good inundation canals supplemented by wells (it already yields, £1.11s. 0 l. when irrigated by inferior inundation canals so supplemented). In this case the profit to the Government out of that 8s. will be only 3s. 6d. an acre instead of 6s. an acre as on a perennial canal; 3s. 6 l. will, however, represent profit on a capital outlay of only £1 per acre, while 6s. will be then on a capital which in the case of the Bari Doab canal is £8. 16s. an acre, in that of the Ganges canal is £5 18s. an acre, and which, notwithstanding Col. Chesney's prophecy that irrigation works in future must cost double the Ganges Canal rate, is estimated for the Madras canals at £4 an acre, and for the Agra Canal as low as £2. 7s. an acre. The percentage of profit in the one case is 17½ per cent., in the other it falls as low as 2·29 per cent. (See p. 26). There are vast tracts where wells exist, or could and would be made available for irrigation by such inundation canals as are proposed—and such operations must evidently be more profitable than to bring down canals from the Himalayas, or to build vast weirs in the alluvial courses of the rivers and to protect these against being out-flanked. Given a limited amount of means, and the question for the Indian Government is plainly, the most profitable method of applying them.

A LOCAL ARMY FOR INDIA.

Discussing the military position of India in the event of a war between England and some European Power, the Pioneer asks, if a death struggle is to take place either at Constantinople or on the banks of the Nile and the Canal, what is England to do with attenuated battalions, slow and sickly recruiting, when marched against the master of two million soldiers? Every colony must be denuded of troops to meet the fearful emergency; and every soldier in India subject to the orders of the War Office may be withdrawn from these shores to fight elsewhere for the safety and honour of England. It is needless to point out to any European resident in India the imprudence of such a step. We need not dwell upon the various contingencies we might have to face. Any man of common-sense can sum them up for himself. But the present aspect of affairs may serve to illustrate the precarious nature of our position. To place our main reliance on a borrowed army, borrowed from a country whose hour of danger will in all human probability be our own hour of danger also, is to trust in a false and fatal security, and we urge every one who has the welfare of British India at heart, to oppose this system by which our strong right arm and chief means of defence may be withdrawn from us, at a moment's warning, against our own wishes and without our consent. The Government of India should hold, in its absolute control, its offensive and defensive forces, the chief of which is recognised to be a powerful contingent of European soldiers. India and England combined should then hold it as a duty to protect the roadway between them. But while the Home Government is tinkering at army reform, alienating its soldiers, losing its recruits by desertion, making irritating and useless changes in its treatment of soldiers, why should India, which wants a large European force, which is prepared to pay for it, which treats it liberally, and whose service is popular, trust to the vacillating whims and humours of the Pall Mall Office?

THE INDIAN MUSULMANS AND THE SUEZ CANAL PURCHASE.

The Times of India asserts that intelligent Moslims on that side of India have been thinking a good deal about the purchase of the Khedive's shares in the Suez Canal. What will surprise them more is to be told that on first learning it they were suddenly seized with a sense of alarm. It will puzzle many, as we confess it did ourselves, to fathom the cause of this alarm; but their reasoning was logical and perfectly intelligible. The astute Moslims argued in this wise—"If, as has been repeatedly asserted for years past, the sole object of the English is to keep their road to India open, having secured their object by obtaining a paramount interest in the Canal, they will now abandon the Sultan of Room, and he being unable, unsupported, to maintain his position in Europe against the combined power of Russia, Austria, and Germany, the Ottoman Empire will necessarily cease to exist." Such being the view taken of this question by the thinking portion of the Mohammedan community here, it should follow—and if we are to credit the high native authority upon which we base our statements it did follow—that the telegram which we published on Wednesday morning last, containing the assurance of Lord Derby that the British Government had not changed its policy upon the whole Eastern Question, would prove acceptable to all whom it concerned in this country. Her Majesty has from forty to fifty millions of Mohammedan subjects under her sway, who, as before stated, take a far more lively and intelligent interest in the Eastern Question than they generally get credit for, and it is certainly not desirable that these forty or fifty millions should be left in any doubt upon a question which in their opinion—rightly or wrongly—deeply concerns them. These forty or fifty millions, moreover, differ on one point materially from the Hindoos and other classes of her Majesty's subjects in India. The latter on all political questions—always save and except questions affecting their religious belief—are as certain to be disunited as the former are certain to be the reverse. The Ruler of Turkey is not what he was in Europe half or even a quarter of a century ago; but the Sultan of Room is in India considerably more than he was since railways and telegrams have brought Europe in closer connection with the East. That England should, single-handed, go to war with Russia, Austria, and Germany, if having succeeded in arranging their differences as to the division of the spoils they should proceed to the dismemberment of the Turkish Empire, is of course out of the question. No one wishes or expects it. Nor do we expect Lord Derby to declare what Ministers mean to do on the occurrence of eventualities which, though unforeseen, may or may not arise. Still we require something more definite and satisfactory from the Foreign Secretary than the announcement that the British Government has not changed its policy in regard to the Eastern Question when no one has any idea of what that policy may be. His lordship can hardly imagine that if her Majesty's Mohammedan subjects will be well pleased to hear that he has rejected the proposal of Russia to abandon the Sultan and give up Constantinople, provided England be permitted to swallow up Egypt, that her Majesty's British subjects will at all relish the idea of England giving up Constantinople and the Sultan without getting Egypt or anything that she might not have had for money's worth, or without anybody's leave or license.

THE WESTERN INDIA CLUB.—We are informed that it is under contemplation to build four upper-storied rooms in the Western India Club at Puna. This addition is very necessary, as the present accommodation is very insufficient to meet the demands of the members and visitors, especially in the monsoon, as large numbers of military and civil officers are disappointed for want of accommodation. This upper-storied additional building will no doubt be given by contract by inviting tenders, as at present the materials as well as labour is much cheaper in Puna than it was some years ago.—Puna Observer, Dec. 23.

THE CHAPTER OF THE STAR OF INDIA.

JANUARY 1.

Every space was crowded. People assembled there from all parts of India—indeed, of the world. There was the Duke of Sutherland in a gay and military costume, wearing the collar and badge of the Thistle, who had a cheery word for everybody. The broad manly shoulders and soldierly bearing of Lord A. Paget in a general's uniform were equally noticeable. American generals, too, were there to witness a ceremony which is unknown in their own country. Sir W. Gregory with his new honours thick upon him came from Ceylon to see the knights made even more grandly than was he in the hall of the old Kandian Kings. Admiral Macdonald and staff represented the Navy; the Bishop of Calcutta and a host of clergy the Church; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mathews the stage; while the military and civilians were too numerous to mention.

After the officers of the Order had robed a procession was formed. The banner of each G.C.S.I. was borne before him by an officer appointed for the purpose. The procession advanced to the Chapter tent under a Royal salute, the signal being given by a flourish of trumpets. First came slowly marching up the enclosure, which was more than a quarter of a mile long, spearmen and men in red livery, carrying huge gold maces and gorgeous punkahs. Then followed Captain Grant, Marshal of the encampment, Mr. Aitchison, Foreign Secretary, and Mr. Henvey. Next came the Companions, too numerous to mention. Then Knight Commanders, Sir D. Forsyth, Colonel Pollock, Sir W. Muir, Sir Mungul Singh Jeypershad, Sir A. Arbuthnot, Sir R. Temple, and the Rajahs of Johore and Vizianagram. These were followed by G.C.S.I.'s. Foremost came the Begum of Bhopal, accompanied by the Political Officer, seven attendants, and a standard-bearer. Her Highness wore a rich sky-blue satin robe, tied at the neck with a white silk cord and tassels, as is usual with G.C.S.I.'s, outside which costume she wore the badge and collar of her rank in the Order. Her train was borne by two pages richly dressed. She wore a blue veil, completely hiding her face during the whole proceedings. Next came Sir Salar Jung, with the Political officer, attendants and banner, similarly attired and decorated. Then followed the Maharaja of Puttiala, evidently postponing his grief for a family affliction. There followed, too, the gallant Lord Napier of Magdala, gorgeous Travancore, amiable Frere, Rewah with his golden crown glittering with jewels, funny Jeypore, massive Holkar, venerable Cashmere, and portly Scindiah, all similarly attended, and elegantly dressed, with a magnificent robe of the Order over all.

Then came a larger and grander banner, followed by General Probyn. The guards of honour presented arms, and flags of the regiment were dropped, and the Prince was seen approaching with slow stately step, shaded beneath an umbrella of cloth of gold with deep gold fringe. Over the Field Marshal's uniform the Prince wore a rich satin robe of the Order, with collar, badge, and a star glittering upon it. He was followed by several middies, who had been converted into pages, Messrs. Walsh and Grinston, of the Undaunted, bearing his train. The pages wore a similar satin hat and feather, and long black curls. The whole costume, in the style of Charles the Second, was quaint and very pretty. Following the Prince came the Viceroy, who is Grand Master. As the procession slowly moved up the long avenue of soldiers and sailors the military bands played a Grand March.—Times of India Correspondent.

After the Grand Secretary Aitchison had read the warrant from the Queen authorising the Prince to hold a Chapter, his Royal Highness proceeded to honour the persons whose names are already published. The Maharaja of Jodhpore, who was dressed in long pink petticoats, like a Bombay nautch girl, was the most striking figure among those honoured. When the ceremony was concluded the procession reformed and marched down the encampment. The Prince was loudly cheered.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

NEWS FROM THE DELHI CAMP.

DELHI, Dec. 18.—The Infantry are employed as before stated in generally practising the attack. H.E. the Commander-in-Chief inspected on Monday last the 1st Division, under Sir Charles Reid, of Delhi fame, the Brigadiers acting under his orders being Brigadier General Macpherson, well known on the Bombay side, when with the 78th, and Brigadier General Brown. The Division is composed of excellent regiments, and worked well, though they, from being inspected on the bare arrival of some of the regiments, did not work out the method of the attack suggested, and apparently copied from Major Sheriff's Book on Tactics. The difficulty which will always attend any such method of attack under British soldiers will lie in the vain attempt of the reserves getting near the skirmishing line prior to the final assault; in fact, the almost impossibility of restraining men working under so great excitement and with their whole attention engrossed with the business in front from rushing on to death or glory; and, unless some restraint is recognised and the skirmishers are forced to lie down and await their reserves, or, as it is called, the main body, the latter will never be in the hunt.

General Macdonell's division is to be inspected on Saturday, and the others probably on the Chief's return from Calcutta.

The Cavalry under Colonel Watson have had one or two brilliant field days. On Thursday the whole force of thirteen regiments, thirty-nine squadrons, representing a force of about 4,000 Cavalry, were taken out together and manœuvred.

Yesterday a brigade was sent out under Colonel Charles Gough to force its way into Delhi, the remainder of the Cavalry more or less opposing it. The chief brigade employed against him was the one under Colonel Millar's command. There were several well-turned feints which culminated in a final grand charge of the above two brigades, both coming well into action.

To-day, the 17th, has certainly been marked in the annals of India by the inspection by H. E. the Commander-in-Chief of probably the finest force of Cavalry ever brought together in India, or the largest force of Cavalry ever possessed in the field by the English on one spot; though in the Crimea, I believe, there were actually a greater force of Cavalry with the Army.

The march past, trot, and gallop were most picturesque and brilliant; the flashing of the pennons, the lightning gleaming of the swords, the thunder of the horses' hoofs, and the brilliant variety of costumes, handsome but thoroughly business-like, certainly tend to impress any soldier with pride and satisfaction.

After the march past the Cavalry were drawn up in column of brigades. They changed front, and then the leading brigade moved out in line to the attack, advancing when exposed to fire in columns of fours; the 2nd and 3rd brigades taking ground to the flanks, 300 yards behind the first line, completely protected the flanks of the advancing line. The 4th brigade formed a reserve about 600 yards behind the first line. To strengthen the advance, intermediate in distance between the 1st and the 2nd and the 3rd brigades a squadron of the flank brigade was placed, and an undoubtedly very strong attack was initiated.

This formation was kept up as the main order of attack throughout the day, the minor movements being a charge of the first line straight ahead, while the right flank brigade, wheeling slightly to their right, charged a supposititious enemy bearing down on the flank of the first line—retiring by alternate squadrons; the whole force changing front to their right in somewhat a similar formation to the original one, and finally drawing up in line of columns and advancing in review order towards a position taken up by H.E. the Commander-in-Chief.

It was not only an impressive sight, but one well calculated to raise the hopes of our army and of its officers as representing the talent of men who can manœuvre so well and quietly a force of 4,000 Cavalry without a hitch or contretemps. The only regret was that the four batteries of H. A. were not with the force.

Col. Watson has, it is believed, obtained permission to have one or two more days' command of the Cavalry before they are broken up into the several divisional commands.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE CALCUTTA BAR.—Mr. Cockerell Smith, attorney-at-law, has been ordered by the Calcutta High Court to be struck off the rolls of the Court; but he may be reinstated on his producing good certificates hereafter.

MISS CARPENTER.—Miss Carpenter arrived at Dacca on Monday, Dec. 27. A grand meeting in her honour was held in the East Bengal Theatre Hall on that day. The Philanthropic Society, Dacca, presented her with an address, and she delivered a lecture on the occasion. Miss Carpenter then left Dacca for Calcutta, and hoped to meet there on New Year's Day, some of the gentlemen of Eastern Bengal. She would give an address stating what she has done and seen in Dacca.

THE CROPS AND THE WEATHER.—The Department of Revenue, Agriculture and Commerce reports on the state of the season and prospects of the crops, for the week ending the 16th December, 1875, that in Madras somewhat scanty rain has fallen in the Northern districts and Tanjore, none in the Southern; prospects are satisfactory. Good rain has fallen in the Deccan districts of Bombay, in Khandesh and Nasik, and in some districts of Guzerat and the Southern Mahratta country, doing great good to the rabi; prospects are generally very good throughout the Presidency, including Sind. In the Central Provinces slight showers are reported from a few districts; prospectus continue good. In Rajputana some quantity of rain fell in the previous week, not before reported; and in Malwa there appears to have been general and beneficial rain during the week. In Bengal slight rain is reported from Midnapore, Sarun and Chumparum; prospects continue unchanged, and the harvest progresses. From the North-Western Provinces, Oudh and the Punjab no rain is reported to have fallen; prospects are good. Some rain has fallen in parts of Mysore, but the condition of the crops is still indifferent. In Assam no rain is said to have fallen.

A QUESTIONABLE STATEMENT.—Vanity Fair, in its issue of Oct. 9, made a statement to the effect that Government officials had been allowed to write to Indian gentlemen informing them that they were "expected" to give such and such sums as contributions to provide entertainments, horse races, &c., during the Prince's visit. This general onslaught has been followed up by a personal attack upon Lord Ulick Browne, which, in the form of a series of questions, charges him with attempting to force a certain sum out of two Rajahs. That strict inquiry into the truth of these charges will be made we have no manner of doubt; but meanwhile we entirely disbelieve in the possibility of an official of such experience as Lord Ulick Browne attempting in his official capacity to act in the manner ascribed to him. In any case, Vanity Fair has no right, unless it can bring forward other instances, to publish a statement that the Indian Government consider it either "necessary" or "decent" to "levy forced contributions on the natives."—Pioneer.

THE LATE OUTBREAK AT THE AGRA JAIL.—The convicts, seven in number, who were identified as the ringleaders in the attack made on the 21st instant upon Dr. Tyler, the Superintendent of the Agra Central Jail, were tried and sentenced on the 22nd—four to penal servitude for life, and three to penal servitude for ten years—by Mr. H. G. Keene, Sessions Judge of Agra. Dr. Tyler, it appears, was stooping down to examine the state of health of a prisoner in the carpet factory, said to have been suddenly taken ill, when his head was cut open by a brickbat. He was for a moment forced out of the room by a mob of convicts armed with bricks, stones, and other means of offence. Ex-Captain Liot seized a crowbar and confronted the assailants, and a number of well-disposed prisoners ran up from a neighbouring factory and supported him. Dr. Tyler immediately arrested the ringleaders and sent for the magistrate, on whose arrival they confessed that they had intended to take the Doctor's life. They alleged severity as their excuse; but it is supposed that the attack originated in a conspiracy organised by a wealthy Mussulman convict, against whom, however, evidence seems not to have been forthcoming. We believe that Dr. Tyler is a strict but just governor of his large and unruly flock. The jail population, however, is over three thousand, and the necessity of supporting the Superintendent (by the very sternest methods, if necessary) cannot be denied.—Pioneer, Jan. 1.

BANK OF BENGAL.—Whatever may be thought of the proposed modifications in the Charter of the Bank of Bengal there can be no doubt that they are on the whole highly favourable to the Bank itself. To begin with, a reduction of twenty lakhs is made in its over grown capital, which, though not enough to reduce it within necessary limits, is, as far as it goes, a very appreciable advantage to the shareholders. Then, the additions made to the kinds of business which the Bank is allowed to transact open a wide door for the further utilisation of its capital. On the other hand, we are not quite sure that all these additions are desirable. To the power to lend upon the security of Municipal debentures guaranteed by the Government no exception can be taken; indeed, the non-existence of such a power has been a serious anachronism. As regards the power to lend on goods, without restriction, though it only assimilates the Bank of Bengal to other banks, it may be doubted whether it does not import into its constitution an element of risk from which an institution that is still, to all intents and purposes, the State Bank ought to be kept clear. The difficulties into which the Bank of Bombay was brought by business of this class are still fresh in the memory of the public, and, though the past management of the Bank of Bengal justifies the hope that it would not allow itself to be betrayed into similar imprudence, still there is no guarantee for the bank always being managed with the same skill discretion as heretofore; and it must not be forgotten that Government, in withdrawing from its proprietary interest, is also withdrawing from its share in the direction. The provision limiting loans to a usance of three months is an excellent one. Indeed, we are not sure that the period might not have been made still shorter with advantage to the interests of bonâ fide trade. On the other hand, it is possible that some qualification may be required in the restriction which prevents the Bank from discounting negotiable securities unless they carry on them the separate responsibilities of at least two independent persons or firms. The qualification, as regards Bombay, attached to the power of the Bank to establish branches, is also, we think, open to criticism.—Englishman.

THE ARTILLERY AT DELHI.—The equipment of the batteries has been put to a severe test as far as ground can affect it, and in all cases has proved itself to be all that could be desired, which speaks well for the much abused "contract system." The ground selected for the artillery manœuvres was in many ways unsuited to the movements of that arm. Much of it was very rocky and quite impracticable for guns at any but the slowest pace, nor is a rocky position one which an artillery man loves to select for his battery, since by so doing he doubles the effect of his enemy's shells. The level ground was much intersected by wide and deep nullahs, the banks of which had to be sloped away in most cases at considerable labour before they could be made passible for guns. It is difficult to say why this particular site was selected for the artillery, unless, as has been suggested, it was to get them out of the way. All these difficulties, however, had their advantages; the carriages were severely tested both for endurance and stability, while the capabilities of the drivers were taxed to the uttermost. The result must be regarded as highly satisfactory, for no accident of any kind has occurred. A foreigner must have been struck by the various armaments of the batteries, since among the ten that took part in the movements no less than eight different natures of ordnance were to be observed. Perhaps it is hardly fair to include the heavy battery with its 40-prs. and mortars, or the mountain train with its 7-pr. pop-guns, in this catalogue, as each represents a special branch. That there should be two kinds of breech-loader, and two of muzzle-loader, is, however, an anomaly. The new 9-pr. gun of 6 cwt. is an admirable weapon for the horse artillery, since it possesses the accuracy and range of the 8-cwt. gun, and the lightness of the 9-pr. Armstrong. Let us hope that the 12 and 9-pr. Armstrongs will soon disappear from our field artillery and be replaced by the 9-pr., 6-cwt., and the 16-pr. muzzle loading guns. To have batteries of horse and field artillery throwing the same weight of metal from guns of different weight is doubtless an error. If the present 16-pr. gun is too heavy for all the requirements of a field battery, another gun of the same calibre, but lighter weight, should be introduced, as has been done in the case of the new horse artillery gun. A new method of attaching the pintail hook to the limber has been introduced, by which it is held further from the limber boxes; so that the weight on the back of the shaft horse is reduced, while it renders the operation of limbering up somewhat easier. This is to be put to a series of severe tests by one of the batteries in camp which have not yet been completed. On many occasions the want of an accurate, simple, and quick range-finder has been felt, and the importance of such an instrument cannot fail to increase with the great ranges at which artillery is now supposed to open fire. Captain Weldon's instrument, which is at present being tested, possesses the merit of accuracy under favourable circumstances, i.e., when a base of 100 yards can be obtained. It is, however, extremely fragile, and in ground like that in the neighbourhood of Bussant the extreme base was rarely obtainable. Until we possess a good range-finder, to open fire at extreme ranges, such as 2,500 and 3,000 yards, it can only result in a waste of ammunition, since it is impossible to tell if your fire is effective.

CHOLERA IN SIKANDARABAD.—We regret to state that cholera continues to prevail in Sikandarabad and its suburbs. On Sunday four deaths occurred from this cause, and on Monday, out of thirteen seizures, seven terminated fatally. There were some cases in the lines of the 3rd P. L. I., but the 40th Regiment, where the disease first re-appeared, is, we are glad to say, now quite free.—Madras Times, Dec. 24.

A RAJAH KUMAR COLLEGE.—A meeting was held on Christmas Day, at the Hon. H. P. Cunningham's house, for the purpose of taking into consideration the necessity of establishing at Madras a Rajah Kumar College—or College for the instruction of the sons of native Rajahs, Zamindars, and other members of the native aristocracy of this Presidency—similar to an institution of the same kind in Northern India. The meeting was well attended by the Rajahs and other native chiefs still in Madras, as well as by many of the leading members of the native community in the city, who approved of the undertaking and promised it support. It was calculated that the establishment of the College would cost 10 lakhs of rupees.—Madras Mail.

FROM NELLOR TO MADRAS BY WATER.—The East Coast Canal, being now completed north of Kistnapatam, is becoming a very popular route between Nellor and Madras. The distance from Nellor to Kistnapatam is fourteen miles. The road is one of the best leading out of Nellor, and is really a delightful drive of three hours. The traffic is becoming so extensive that it is sometimes difficult to secure even top boats, much more so to secure a budgerow. A good line of boats—both freight and passenger—would be good speculation for an enterprising man. And what would be still better, if the owner of that steam-tug which lies in the basin would fit her up and make regular trips between Madras and Kistnapatam, he might, in time, make a small fortune out of it. Then, with a single tramway to Kistnapatam, Nellor would be almost as well off as if a railway connected it with Madras.—Madras Athenæum Correspondent.

DEPARTURE OF SIR F. HAINES.—An event of the week intimately concerning the Madras Army is the departure of Sir Frederick Haines, the Commander-in-Chief, who left us for good on Friday evening, after being connected with the local army for thirty-six years. His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and a large number of ladies and gentlemen were present at the Railway Station to take leave of his Excellency, who was heartily cheered as he was borne away by the iron-horse, bearing with him the good wishes of Madras. Sir Frederick left Bombay by the mail steamer which sailed last Monday; and on Thursday a general order was published at Madras containing his Excellency's farewell to the Madras Army, which is full of laudation, and is no doubt very gratifying to all whom it may concern. Sir Neville Chamberlain, his successor, is expected to take charge on the 20th instant, and in the meantime General Elmhirst has been appointed Provincial Commander-in-Chief. Colonel Silver's tenure of office as Secretary to the Madras Government in the Military Department expired yesterday, but he holds on until the arrival of the new Commander-in-Chief.—Madras Times, Jan. 1.

THE PRINCE'S REPLY TO THE UNIVERSITY ADDRESS.—Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor and Fellows of the University of Madras,—Short as has been my stay in your Presidency, I have not failed to notice more than one proof that your University is already fulfilling some of the higher objects for which it was instituted. Official men, whose experiences reaches far beyond the date of your foundation, assure me that University graduates are already found filling many of the higher posts in the public service, that by the mode in which their work is done they give proof of superior intellectual training, and, what is far more important, that they justify, by their general conduct, the hope that here, as elsewhere, a University education will fix and help to maintain a high standard of social and moral conduct. This is in itself a great practical and useful result. I gather from other sources that your University is effectually encouraging the scientific study of the ancient languages and literature of India; that pure science receives attention, and, above all, that the effectual aid you have given in an official form to education of all kinds has stimulated and encouraged that energy in private persons and in official associations to which education in your Presidency has always owed so much. I trust that a career of increasing usefulness and prosperity is before your University, and, in acknowledging your farewell, I thank you very sincerely for your kind expressions regarding myself and my visit to Madras, which has afforded me so much pleasure.

BURMAH PROPER.—News from Mandalay to the 3rd of December published in the Rangoon Gazette, says:—"Everything at Mandalay is now brought to a stand still. The virtuous King of Burmah, who issues gold coin at five rupees, and receives it back at four rupees, who does not pay his soldiers, who deceives merchants, who cripples agriculture and production all over his country, spends his days reading religious books. No business of any kind can therefore be transacted by the Ministers, who now and then get but distant glimpses of his most pious Majesty. I wonder what those religious books can be all about. They cannot, surely, refer to the merits of mercy, charity, justice, honesty, truth, purity of life, righteousness, generosity, &c., seeing the contempt which the King shows in practice for all these virtues. Could any sincere Buddhist in Rangoon tell what are the teachings of the books the King is now studying so much?—The Mixed Court has been re-opened on a better footing now than in the past. With Colonel Duncan to watch over it, British merchants ought to take courage and establish at Mandalay a few houses which, if backed up with a good cash power, would soon swamp the present few native dealers, and force on the King and his officials straightforward, honest, and punctual dealings. Captain Strover had frightened British merchants away. With Colonel Duncan, who can be said par excellence to be suaviter in modo et fortiter in re, we ought to witness ere long a great revival of trade in Upper Burmah."

MR. J. DANVERS ON HIS TRAVELS.—Mr. Juland Danvers, Government Director of Guaranteed Railways, went to Ahmadabad last week along with Mr. Currey to inspect the Bombay and Baroda Railway. Next Monday he starts with Mr. LeMesurier for Bhosawul, goes on thence to Oomrawutte, Khangaum, and Hingunghaut, and the Warora collieries, then returns to Bhosawul, and proceeds to Khundwa and Indore, finally returning to Khundwa Junction and going on to Jubbulpore, which station he will reach about the end of next week.—Bombay Gazette, Jan. 3.

FINANCIAL.—It is stated that owing to the retirement of Mr. A. R. Gordon from the Financial Department, the following changes have been made:—Dr. G. W. Cline, barrister-at-law, of the Financial Department, reverts to Bombay to take charge of the Currency-office of Bombay. It is stated that the Government are desirous of introducing an uniform system in the practice and procedure of the Currency-offices both at Calcutta and Bombay, and with this view it has been found desirable that the Currency officers of the Presidency should live on the premises. It is not yet settled whether a special Head Commi sioner of Currency will not be appointed. There is no doubt that this would be a move in the right direction. —Times of India.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—His Excellency Sir Charles Staveley, K.C.B., Commander-in-Chief of the Army, accompanied by Lady Staveley, Major W. C. Justice, Military Secretary, Major G. A. Furse, Aide-de-Camp, Major T. E. A. Hall, Deputy Adjutant General and Lady Hall, arrived in Bombay from Puna by the early train on Friday, and embarked for Carwar in H.M.'s steamer May Frere in the forenoon from the Apollo Bunder. His Excellency will be joined by Major A. G. F. Hogg (who preceded H. E. by the B. I. steamer of the 25th December), Deputy Quarter Master General of the army at Carwar, and from thence proceed to Honore. H. E. and suite after a stay of a few days will proceed to Dharwar on a tour of inspection to the Belgaum District, arriving as under: Dharwar 20th, Belgam 23rd, Kolapur 25th, Satara 27th, and Puna 29th January, 1876.—Bombay Gazette, Jan. 3.

PUNA ENGINEERING COLLEGE.—We have to congratulate the Professors of the Puna Engineering College on the results of their labour for the past year. This Institution sent this year to Bombay a number of students for their final examination for Civil Engineering and we are glad to say three passed out. The first prize was gained by a Parsee student, who had upwards of 100 marks to space. The third student only saved himself by a very few marks from being plucked. The prize for the first student is, gold medal, valued at Rs. 250, and professional books of the value of Rs. 150, together with a guarantee of a situation under Government of Rs. 250 per mensem as Assistant Engineer. We are given to understand that this is the first year in which a European student from the Puna College has passed in this degree, and we would here congratulate them on their success, and trust that this year's examination may act as a strong incitement for those who may follow in future years. We are fully aware that there will be no want of painstaking or encouragement with such gentlemen at the helm as Professors Cooke and Scorgie.—Puna Observer.

JOTTINGS FROM SIAM.—Hitherto it had been the custom in Siam to go on all fours in the presence of Royalty, and even of the high officers of State, but the present King, after his visit to Bombay and Calcutta, abolished the barbarous practice. On the day of coronation, which took place after his return from India, the Siamese princes and nobles prostrated themselves on their faces before him, but he ordered them to rise, and salute him after the manner of the Western nations, telling them that their own national custom had a tendency to debase them in the eyes of their fellow-creatures, and that they should not conform to it in future. I don't know whether you have a very correct idea of the general appearance of the Siamese, but, lest you should not, I shall try to describe them for you. They have the same general cast of features as their neighbours, the Burmese and Malays, but are somewhat lighter in complexion. Neither male nor female, however, can, by any stretch of imagination, be pronounced good-looking, the more especially as no one is ever seen without a large lump of betel in the mouth, and a thick layer of this nasty stuff adhering to the lips. Men as well as women, besides, blacken their teeth from their very earliest years, as if black teeth were an adornment, instead of the reverse; and their ugliness is further intensified by their peculiar mode of wearing their hair, which is cut very close, except over the forehead, where a short tuft is allowed to grow, in either a round or oval form, according to individual taste. Their dress, as among the natives of India, consists of a dhoti and chaddar; but, unlike the Indian custom, this dress is common to both sexes. The men throw the chaddars loosely across their shoulders, while the women, so long as they are unmarried, carefully conceal their persons with it, but after arriving at a certain age, say twenty-five or thirty, are as careless and unconcerned as the men. Being, therefore, dressed alike, and wearing their hair after the same fashion, a stranger experiences the utmost difficulty in distinguishing the male from the female, the more so as the latter is not by any means invariably feminine in appearance, nor the former hirsute. Indeed, so great is the difficulty, that I have more than once mistaken a man for a woman, and vice versa, and have been obliged to apologise for the mistake. The only certain criterion to go by, as I have now learnt from a native, is to observe closely how the chaddar is worn; if it is thrown carelessly across the shoulders, then the wearer is a man; if, on the contrary, it carefully envelops the upper portion of the body, then the wearer is a woman. Fancy the idea of being able to decide the sex of a person by only an extra turn or two of a chaddar round the body!—Englishman Correspondent

EXPORT OF BULLION.—Girard de Quetteville's Indian Circular of Jan. 20, records the following exports of bullion, at the undermentioned dates, by the steamers of the P. and O. Steam Navigation Company, from Southampton:—Per Indus, 13th Jan., Bombay, gold, £1,000, silver, £44,230; Ceylon, gold, £3,795; Madras, gold, £791; Penang, silver, £27,500. Per Pekin, 20th Jan., Bombay, silver, £118,050.

NEW BISHOPS FOR INDIA.—At the monthly meeting of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, held Jan. 21, a letter was laid before the society, from the Archbishop of Canterbury, informing the Society that the Bishops of Calcutta and Madras concur in desiring the consecration in India of two well known missionaries, Dr. Caldwell and Dr. Sergeant; that the Government is willing to consent to their consecration as bishops; and that the proper steps for their consecration by the Bishop of Calcutta will be taken immediately, if a suitable arrangement (in which the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel is invited to bear its part) for providing moderate episcopal incomes can be made. The Archbishop concludes his important letter in these words:—"I feel confident that your society will rejoice with me at the prospect of speedily completing this addition to the efficiency of our Church in India, and will join in a hearty prayer to Almighty God that our missionary efforts may be strengthened and extended by the attainment of an object which attached members of our Church have so long ardently desired."

THE WELL AT CAWNPORE.—"H. Y." writes to the Times—"You Special Correspondent, in his telegram letter dated Delhi, January 16, attributes the gardens at Cawnpore to Colonel Yule. But they were entirely the work of the late Cudbert Bensley Thornhill, of the Bengal Civil Service, a man greatly beloved and still lamented by many besides him who now addresses you. The same gentleman minutely superintended the building and carving of the monument over and round the well, and without his affectionate and untiring care the work never would have been executed as it has been. But the entire architectural design and the inscription on the monument were the work of the aforesaid Colonel Yule. I am desirous to put these facts on record once for all, because I have repeatedly seen the architecture of the monument attributed to Mr. Thornhill and the inscription attributed to Lord Canning, while here we see the beautiful gardens round the work attributed to Colonel Yule. Further, your correspondent, alluding to the introduction of the Nana's name in the inscription, says 'it ought not to have been recorded here.' I have several times before seen the same criticism in print. But why? I never have been able to get even a glimmering of a reason. This I know, that two out of the three Creeds acknowledged by the Church of England introduce the name of Pontius Pilate. But I never heard a criticism upon that commemoration."

TROOPS FOR INDIA.—The Malabar, Captain Kelly, left Portsmouth on Friday for Bombay, taking out the 21st Brigade, R.A.; Captain Jones and a detachment of the Depot Brigade, R.A., consisting of forty non-commissioned officers and men; Captain Jackson, one drummer, thirty-six rank and file, 1st Batt. 18th (Royal Irish) Regiment. The following officers also embark in her:—

Capt. Haliday, 1st Batt. 11th Foot; Capt. the Hon. J. C. Amhurst, 4th Batt. Rifle Brigade; Lieut.-Col. Purvis, R.A.; Lieutenants Roskyn, Baldwin, Jones, Foley, Ferrier, Campbell, Spilsbury, Finnis, and Scott, R.A.; Lieut. Nesbitt, 2nd Batt. 60th Rifles; Lieut. Maudsley, 16th Lancers; Deputy Surgeon-General Fasson, Surgeon-Major Shortt, Surgeons Clarke, Hinds, Moore, Wilson, Sullivan, and Garde, A.M.D.

The Malabar has been provided with a couple of automatic ventilators, which will be fitted fore and aft. The invention is of American origin, and is reported to have answered admirably on board the Osborne, royal yacht. An air receiver, 6ft. high and 22in. in diameter, is placed on both sides of the ship and connected with pipes 8in. in diameter. These connecting pipes are filled with water, and the principle of the contrivance is simply this, that when the vessel rolls at sea the water rushes to starboard and forms a vacuum in the port receiver, into which the foul air of the ship is instantly sucked. On the return roll the water rushes to port, drives out the air, and leaves a vacuum in the same manner in the starboard receiver; and, such is the extreme force with which the foul air of the ship is expelled that it is to be used on board the Malabar for the purpose of sounding a fog horn which shall be heard a mile off. Neither the horn nor the ventilation, however, will be affected when the sea is perfectly calm.

HOW MANGLES AND MCDONELL WON THE VICTORIA CROSS.—With Dunbar's relieving force went Mr. McDonell and Mr. Ross Mangles, of the Civil Service. They did excellent service on the way. The local knowledge of the former enabled him to act as a guide, and the rifles of both were in constant requisition. In the first attack on our columns, Mangles had been stunned by a musket ball, but he soon recovered himself, and was helping the surgeon who accompanied the force to bind up the wounds of his comrades, or carrying water to them in their agony. When morning dawned he shouldered his piece and stepped on with the rest towards the nullah, resolute to sell his life dearly, In the flower of his youth, a man of a fine presence, with a long stride and a firm hand on his two barrel, our men looked to him, in the morning light, as to one who, though without official command, had natural right to be obeyed; and he did much good service as he went by his animating influence upon others and by his own personal prowess. Though by reason of his stature a conspicuous mark for the enemy, and "though dozens of poor fellows," as he wrote afterwards, "were knocked over close to him," by the blessing of God he escaped unharmed. He escaped to do a noble deed. A soldier of the Thirty seventh, who had been struck down and was left helpless on the ground, where he would presently have been murdered by the Sepoys, implored the young civilian not to desert him. So amidst a destructive fire of musketry, Ross Mangles the Younger halted and knelt down, bound up the man's wounds, hoisted him on his back, and strode on with his burden. He had fasted for twenty-four hours; he had watched for forty-eight; but notwithstanding this want of food and rest, he declared afterwards that he had "never felt so strong in his life." As well was it that the invigorating sense of a great duty so sustained him. For the man whom he bore was as big as himself, and the enemy were close upon his track. Compelled, now and then, to lay his burden down, he stood over the wounded man, and if opportunity offered, turned the interval of rest to account by taking a shot at the insurgents. And the good God watched over this deed of mercy and love; for young Mangles carried the wounded soldier, over rough and swampy ground, for a space of six miles, till he reached the nullah; and then swimming out and holding up the helpless man in the water, he reached a boat, laid his charge safely in it, and soon had the delight of seeing him in good hands at the hospital of Dinapore, with leisure to thank God and his preserver for his almost miraculous deliverance. Differing in kind, but not in degree, from this heroic exploit, was another act of daring self devotion done by Mr. McDonell, of the same service. It was in no small measure owing to his representations and to his offer to act as a guide to the relieving force, for he knew the country well, that General Lloyd, consented to send the European detachment into Shahabad. Always in the front, always in the thick of the battle, he did excellent service, as I have said before, on the march. Many a mutineer sunk beneath the fire of his rifle. He was beside Dunbar when he fell, and was sprinkled with the life-blood of the luckless leader. Wounded himself, he still fought on gallantly during the retreat, and reached the nullah with a stiffened limb, but with no abatement of vigorous courage. There, having done his best to assist others more helpless than himself, he entered the last of the boats; and deliverance seemed to be at hand. But the insurgents had taken away the oars and had lashed the rudder, and though the breeze was favourable for the escape of our people, the current carried the boat back to the river-bank, and fast and furious came the shower of musket-balls from the pieces of the enemy. The boats were the large covered boats—the "floating haystacks"—of the country, which afforded excellent shelter to those who huddled together beneath the clumsy thatch. There were thirty-five European soldiers on board the boat; and Mr. McDonell, seeing the difficulty and danger which the impossibility of steering the vessel brought upon them, called upon the men to cut the lashings of the rudder. But no man stirred. So McDonell went out from the shelter, and climbing on to the roof of the boat, perched himself on the rudder and cut the lashings, amidst a very storm of bullets from the contiguous bank. It was truly a providential deliverance that he escaped instant death. Coolly and steadily he went about his perilous work, and though some balls passed through his hat, not one did him any harm. Thus the rudder was loosened, the boat answered to the helm, and by McDonell's gallant act the crew were saved from certain destruction. The good deed was not forgotten. It afterwards earned for the noble-hearted civilian the crowning glory of the Victoria Cross.—Kaye's "Sepoy War," Vol. 3.

It has been proved beyond all dispute that the twin principle, advocated by Captain Dicey, has succeeded in reducing sea-sickness to a minimum, and that no sea-going craft has ever been built possessing such an amount of steadiness, combined with ample accommodation and comfort, and facility of steering, as the "Castalia."

The popularity which the "Castalia" has acquired with travellers, whilst running between Dover and Calais during the past autumn, may be fairly tested by the following figures. She commenced a regular Channel Service on 5th August last, and during nineteen days of that month she carried a daily average of 38 passengers. In September her average number per day was 64; in October, 115; and in November she carried at the rate of 159 passengers per day; thus proving that although the passenger traffic with the Continent is much greater in August and September than during any other months, yet, when the advantages possessed by the "Castalia" over the ordinary packet boats became known and appreciated, her number of passengers rapidly increased, notwithstanding the diminution of the general traffic across the Channel.

The following figures from the official returns at Calais show the large passenger traffic between England and the Continent by the Dover and Calais route. The number of passengers were:—

In 1866	...	...	125,732	In 1871‡	...	...	116,996
1867†	...	...	199,137	1872	...	...	166,265
1868	...	...	142,223	1873	...	...	181,270
1869	...	...	154,659	1874	...	...	198,656
1870‡	...	...	107,308	1875	...	...	208,132

The above statistics demonstrate the steady growth of the traffic, the increase during the ten years having been over 66 per cent. With an improved class of vessel it may be confidently anticipated the traffic will increase in the future still more rapidly.

The only requirement to enable the "Castalia" and her future consorts to secure the larger proportion of this traffic is a greater amount of speed, so as to insure their meeting the Mail trains on both sides of the Channel. This increased speed can be unquestionably obtained in a new vessel, and the Directors have made preliminary arrangements with one of the largest firms of Ship Builders in England for the building of a new Steam Ship, possessing all the advantages of the "Castalia," (with such improvements as experience has shown possible), and with a guaranteed speed of not less than 14 knots per hour. Alterations are also being made in the "Castalia" to improve her running.

The Shareholders having approved of the above-named proposals of making certain alterations in the "Castalia," and of building another vessel of her type, it was resolved, at a Special Meeting, held on the 8th December, and confirmed by a subsequent Special Meeting, held on the 24th December last, to issue £150,000 of additional Capital, in Shares of £10 each, such Capital to receive a Preferential and Cumulative Dividend, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and that after the Ordinary Capital shall have received an equivalent Dividend, then all surplus profits should be divided equally between the Ordinary and Preferential Shares.

Independently of the commercial question, it is important to every traveller crossing the Channel to secure the success of this scheme as a national undertaking, and as the only practical means of affording relief from the suffering of the "middle passage," and on this ground also the directors appeal to the general public to take an interest in an enterprise which has proved to be successful in principle, which has received the highest testimonials from members of the Royal Family and travellers of all classes and professions and which, when carried out on an extended scale, must contribute to the comfort and benefit of the community at large, and yield an ample profit to the shareholders.

Applications for shares can be made upon the annexed form, and forwarded to the Secretary or the Bankers of the Company, accompanied by a cheque for the amount of deposit.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, January 10; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, January 8; Calcutta, January 7.

THE events of the week in India were the Prince of Wales's progress from Calcutta to Bankipur, Benares, and Lucknow, Lord Napier's mishap at Delhi, a riot at Haidarabad, the departure of the Flying Squadron from Calcutta, and the despatch of armed parties under Captain Udney, of the 44th N.I., and Police Superintendent Goad, against the Nagas who attacked Captain Butler. The Grand Chapter of the Star of India, held on the 1st January, belongs rather to the week before, and has been fully described in the telegrams. Enough here to say that it was of course a magnificent sight in its way, but apparently not more magnificent than the ceremony performed six years ago on the same spot, in the presence of Lord Mayo and the Duke of Edinburgh. The accident to Lord Napier was caused by his horse rolling over him. He remained on horseback throughout the parade, and it was only after his return to his tent that his collar-bone was found to be broken.

NOT the least touching scene connected with the Prince's Indian tour was his laying the first stone of the monument destined to commemorate, at Lord Northbrook's own expense, the noble faithfulness of the Sepoys who fought and fell in defence of Lucknow Residency in 1857. In a becoming speech Sir G. Couper avowed his belief that the conduct of those brave men at Lucknow was without parallel in the annals of the world, for their only watchword was fidelity to their salt, and they were tempted for days by their relations, castemen, and comrades to save their religion and their race by deserting the British. Had these men listened to their comrades and deserted, Lucknow must have fallen, and thousands of trained soldiers of the enemy would have been set free to march on Delhi. We may discern a little sting in the tail of his speech, when he said that "less distinguished services had been commemorated at the cost of the nation, but the Viceroy had done this at his own expense." If we hope with Sir George that when the Prince's visit is over, "the part taken by his Royal Highness on that spot, consecrated by the blood of the truest and bravest of England and India, will not be forgotten by the natives of India," we would also hope that the part played in the matter by Lord Northbrook will be held in yet stronger remembrance.

AT the unveiling of the statue of the late Lord Mayo on the Calcutta Maidan, the Prince of Wales, in a few words which were nearly inaudible around the dais, expressed the pleasure and satisfaction it gave him to inaugurate the statue of one in whose praises Mr. Bullen Smith had so justly spoken, of one whom he might call a personal friend of his own, and who, he was sure, had he lived, would have left behind him a distinguished name as Viceroy and Governor General of the Indian Empire; and of one whom he would ever remember with pride and pleasure.

A FEW more particulars of the attack on Captain Butler's party are supplied by the Pioneer. Early on Christmas-day, Captain Butler's party marched from Lakhuti on the road to Pangti, a village where they meant to encamp that same night. Before they started from Lakhuti they had been warned against the possible outbreak of hostilities. On reaching the river the narrow path crossed some deep ravines, and wound through tall grass. "On a sudden the guide from Lakhuti ran off; and then the war cries from the jungle all round showed that it was alive with hostile Nagas. So thick, though, was the jungle, that the enemy, hardly five yards from the path, were invisible. Then came a shower of spears, stones, and so forth; answered by the Sepoys most emphatically, for groans were heard from the different parts of the jungle. Captain Butler, it seems, had gone back some little time before the first alarm to give orders about crossing the coolies over a suspicious looking ravine. All at once a Naga started into the path; and before a rifle could be raised he hurled a spear at Captain Butler that struck him just below the collar-bone, and pierced his right breast." The wounded man was brought into camp, and for some few days seemed to be doing well. Meanwhile a small force under Colonel Tulloch attacked and destroyed Pangti.

THE stories of street fighting at Haidarabad appear to have been somewhat embellished. The Pathans in that city, alarmed by the reported arrest of their priest, suspected of instigating the recent murder of the Nizam's chief Munshi, assembled for self-defence. Great excitement prevailed, and blows were exchanged, the result of which is that one man was killed and two wounded. All however was quiet on January 9. The Minister having repeatedly declared that all needful arrests had been made, the Pathans dispersed to their homes. By way of precaution the jail guards had since been doubled.

WE learn that Mr. C. U. Aitchison, C.S.I., will leave Calcutta for Europe by the steamer of the 10th of February on one year's leave. Dr. Thornton was to join the Foreign Office and relieve him about the 28th current.

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE has finally rejected the claims of Buxa to be the site of a European colony. Two other places are now under discussion. One of these is only about twenty miles distant from the future terminus of the Northern Bengal State Railway, which is to run just up to the foot of the hills. The water-supply, however, is not quite so plentiful as it might be. The other, a far more likely site, is in British Bhutan, north-east of Darjiling. A fair number of applications from intending colonists, with sufficient means, have already been received; and a nucleus thus formed promises well for the future prosperity of the colony, wherever it may be settled.

AFFAIRS in Muscat were once more troubled. Sayid Turki, the late Imam, appears to have repented of the step he took when he handed the government over to his brother Abdul Aziz, and retired to Gwadar. At any rate he has lately landed at Muscat, and required his brother to give up the stewardship. Abdul Aziz, at the time, was away in the interior, and the people of Muscat were not quite decided about the respective merits of the two brothers. When the news was sent off from Muscat, Sayid Turki had taken up his abode in the Palace; and it seems likely that Abdul Aziz will have to come down from his high estate.

IT appears that Sir Henry Norman has consented, at Lord Salisbury's request, to retain his seat in the Viceroy's Council for another year.

THE old Roman practice of converting debtors into slaves finds its counterpart in at least one district of modern India. In the little State of Bánswára in Mewár there still prevails a practice which is thus described by Mr. Framji Bhikaji, Assistant Political Agent, in a report recently forwarded by him to Colonel C. Herbert, the Political Agent of Mewár:—"Poor people (particularly in the Bhil class), who are either involved in debt or desirous of marrying, but who cannot afford to clear off the one to accomplish the other, go and offer themselves to be engaged to the richer classes as bondmen (commonly known as Surgis), either in perpetuity, or until such time that they are able to pay off their liabilities, which are always saddled with usurious interest. The latter, however, they are seldom or never able to do." It is also stated that the indebtedness of a bondman dying before his release descends to his wife and children, and in many cases has been prolonged for generations. We learn moreover that "When any children of the bondmen run away from the bondholder, they are invariably traced up and carried off, unless the money advanced to their parents is reimbursed by some one." In the midst of our endeavours to capture slave-dhows on the Zanzibar coast, it would be well to look into matters nearer home, and put an early stop to the slavery which still flourishes in our own dominions. A practice of nearly the same kind prevails, we are told, in some parts of Malaya and in Siam, where a debtor unable to meet his liabilities allows himself to be put up to auction, and "knocked down" to the highest bidder.

THE Calcutta Committee on the grievances of Bengal civilians are said to have completed their inquiries; but owing to the general stoppage of business caused by the Prince's visit, some little time might still elapse before their Report could be made public. The Pioneer however had heard that the next mail was likely to carry home some definite proposals; and if the Secretary of State consents to them by telegraph, the offers which the Government may intend to make will, perhaps, be out in a few weeks. There is no room, adds our contemporary, "for secresy as to the general character which these must assume. We indicated a long time ago that the distribution of retiring pensions among the civilians of the crowded years must inevitably form a prominent feature in the Committee's proposals, even if it did not exhaust them. The amount at which those pensions will be fixed is entirely a matter of detail, and nothing will oblige any man to accept them if he does not like. On the one hand, if they are declined by so many men that they fail in procuring the relief sought, the offer of the Government will stand condemned as insufficient; on the other, if they are taken up, the over-ready grumbling of a few malcontents here and there will be proved to have been groundless."

AMONG the lately made Companions of the Star of India Colonel C. M. MacGregor deserves special notice for the part he played in the Bengal Famine of 1874 as Director of Transport. His services on that occasion would alone have entitled him to such an honour; but they were enhanced by much good work done during the Mutiny and in China, as well as in Lord Napier's Abyssinian campaign. After 1868 he was employed in preparing a complete gazetteer of all the countries between Russia and India; and, as the Army and Navy Gazette points out, he has "just accomplished, at his own expense, an arduous and perilous journey of over three thousand miles, along the whole of the east and north frontiers of Persia from Birjand, by Herat, Mashad, Sarrakhs, and the Atrak to Astrabad."

ANOTHER of the new Companions, Mr. S. C. Bayley, the Commissioner of Patna, likewise rendered noble service during the Famine. Mr. R. B. Chapman, Secretary to the Government of India in the Financial Department, receives the same honour for services of a different sort during the last twenty-five years. The Hon. William Holloway, Judge of the Madras High Court, entered the Madras Civil Service in 1848. The Hon. E. W. Ravenscroft, Acting Chief Secretary to the Bombay Government in the Political and Secret Department, is the next to notice among the new Companions. The Hon. C. E. Bernard, a member of the Bengal Council, belongs to the noble army of Famine-Wallahs. The list also includes the names of Colonel F. H. Rundall, R.E., Deputy Secretary to the Government of India in the Irrigation Branch, Mr. Bullen-Smith the able representative of the commercial interest in the Legislative Council, and Mr. H. P. Lemesurier, of the G.I.P. Railway. Major General the Hon. H. Ramsay, for many years Commissioner of Kamaon, and Mr. W. Robinson, of the Madras Council, deservedly take their place among the Knights Commanders.

ON the 23rd December the first train crossed the great Chenab bridge at Wazirabad, a structure which may claim the distinction of being the largest bridge in the world, being 9,300 feet, or over a mile and three-quarters in length. This great work consists of 64 openings, of 133 feet 4 inches clear span, or 142 feet span from centre to centre of the piers. The girders, weighing altogether 6,000 tons, are calculated for the heavy 5 feet 6 inches gauge, though at present they will only carry the metre gauge. There is no under roadway for ordinary wheel traffic or pedestrians. Each pier is founded on three wells 12 feet 6 inches in diameter, sunk to a minimum depth of 70 feet below low water level. The work throughout has been done under the direction of the present Engineer-in-Chief, Mr. Alexander Grant, of the Institute of Civil Engineers; Mr. Henry Lambert, C.E., Superintendent of Works, having been the officer in immediate charge, assisted by Messrs. Storey, Johnson and Dooley, Executive Engineers, as well as by several able subordinates. It may be added that the whole of this great undertaking was begun and carried out in four years.

ON the 22nd of January the Prince resumed his journey from Wazirabad to Lahor. As the Prince's train approached the city it was quite dark, but the citadel, public buildings and streets were illuminated by lines of butties (small saucers with oil and wick), giving out a soft, mellow light. The Governor and the Punjab authorities received the Prince at the station, where was also collected a small crowd of Europeans, and the party drove rapidly to Government House. They dined at ten, and went in full dress to the entertainment provided by the natives in the Government College. In the Hall of this were ranged on one side the Sikh Sirdars and other natives, on the other the Europeans. On the dais at one end was a throne like a Chair of State, and under the canopy, along the walls, the emblazoned shields of the Punjab chiefs, coats of arms and banners, the work of Mr. Kipling's pupils. Underneath each, standing motionless on a pedestal in full dress armour or uniform, was a Punjabi, armed to the teeth, representing the State or a Chief. As the Prince entered the natives made salaams. Presently the native nobility and the givers of the banquet were introduced. Among the 120 presented were members of the old Royal family of Delhi, and of the Royal family of Afghanistan; descendants of Nanak, the founder of the Sikh faith, and of Govind, who made the Sikhs a military nation. There were also Rajputs, Pathans, and Beluchis, gathered from the remotest slopes of the Sulaiman Hills. In spite of orders to the contrary, many of the Chiefs tendered their nazars, or gifts, and it was necessary to touch them before the givers would pass on; but they were pleased beyond expression at the honour done them, and content to receive one gracious bow from the son of their Empress. Then came a ceremony which excited the greatest interest. A number of natives were called one by one to receive from the Prince's hands medals and ribands, which were fixed on the breast by an aide-de-camp.

THIS ceremony over, the Prince mounted a staircase to the platform on the roof to witness a display of fireworks. In the words of the Times reporter, "it was worth thousands of miles of travel to look down on Lahor, every street, every building traced out in lines of light. The fort of old Ranjit Singh towered above all; parapets, battlements, all were illuminated. Below there was a tumultuous sea of heads, which seemed to beat against fiery barriers. Most of those on the roof and platform were Europeans; the Natives, with instinctive good taste, had left room for their guests, being content to remain below. The fireworks were heralded by the ascent of fire balloons, which followed in a continuous stream, till the sky was loaded with these novel constellations. It was cold, and the wind, unluckily, blew towardst he spectators, which somewhat marred the effect; but £1,500 worth of rockets, bombs, catherine wheels, and fixed pieces were set hissing, bursting, and blazing in twenty minutes. Just below the Prince, round a great bonfire, danced some wonderful people with swords, putting one much in mind of Highland practices of a similar description; but they were too far off to be altogether as attractive as they were meant to be." The fireworks were followed by a supper, during which the band of the Royal Scots sang glees, and then the Prince, walking down the Grand Hall in front of his suite, was escorted by Native gentlemen to his carriage, and drove to Government House through an illuminated road."

THE Times reporter denies that any double set of presents has been made, or that some persons have made and received gifts twice over. "It is understood that among the more ignorant people an expectation prevailed that the Prince would confer jagirs and bestow great sums in charity, and that disappointment exists because he has not done so. A contrast is drawn between the lavish contributions of the Natives to entertain the Prince and the smallness of the European contributions."

ON the 25th the Prince arrived at Agra, after having stopped en route at Amritsar, where his Royal Highness witnessed the illumination of the Golden Temple. The Prince also paid a flying visit to the Rajah of Patiala, by whom he was magnificently received. Great preparations had been made at Agra for the Prince's reception, and his entry into the city was a splendid and brilliant affair. A grand procession was formed, in which there were several hundred elephants wearing gorgeous trappings. Seventeen Rajahs were present. A vast crowd of natives assembled to witness the Prince's arrival, and welcomed his Royal Highness with respectful cordiality. Next day the Prince received the Municipality, and afterwards held a levée for the reception of the Native Princes. The city was beautifully decorated in honour of the Prince's visit.

ON the 26th the Prince witnessed a grand procession formed by the retinues of the Rajahs assembled at Agra. Every available man, horse, camel, and elephant was utilised for the occasion, and the effect presented was very imposing. Each Rajah headed his own followers. The Prince afterwards visited the celebrated Taj-Mahal, and attended a splendid fête given in his honour by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces in the old Palace at Agra. The fort and the city were brilliantly illuminated at nightfall.

THE Prince of Wales, attended by Lord Aylesford and Cols. Ellis, Annesley, and Williams, left the Camp at eight on the morning of January 27 for a shooting excursion at Bhartpur. They returned at eight in the evening, much pleased with their day's sport—eighty head of deer, nilghaus, and ducks. Another party went out boar hunting, but met with no boars and no falls. The Duke of Sutherland, Lord Suffield, Lord Carington, and others remained in Camp. Soon after ten that night the Prince left the Camp at Agra for the Fort to attend a State Ball, of unusual splendour, in the ancient Hall of Akbar, which was very beautifully arranged by Lady Strachey and the Lieutenant-Governor. The Chiefs of Rajputana are said to be greatly pleased with the Prince's visit. The weather was beautiful, and all were well.

ON the 29th the Prince visited the grand old ruins at Fathipur Sikri, about twenty-three miles from Agra. The Prince was shown round the halls, shrines, and temples by the eleventh descendant of Lakir, whose tomb constitutes the principal attraction to the natives. Sir Dinkar Rao had a long interview with the Prince on the 30th, and left, it is said, with most agreeable impressions. He agrees with Madhava Rao as to the value of the visit politically and socially, and wishes are expressed that a son of the Queen might be made Viceroy. After lunching with Lord Mark Kerr and the officers of the 10th Hussars the Prince drove to visit a long-established convent and schools and various institutions in Agra. Several distinguished native gentlemen, Sir Dinkar Rao and others, called to pay their respects. From all sides arrive assurances of the remarkable impression produced by the Prince's visit. The Maharajah of Patiala has laid the foundation stone of a market-place in Rajpur, to be named after the Prince; and the Maharajah of Kashmir has released all prisoners, that they might pray for the Prince's happiness. To-day the Prince is to visit Gwalior. The heat is increasing at midday, but the Prince and suite are all well.

IN a General Order, dated the 18th of January, Lord Napier conveys to the Indian Army the expression of the Prince of Wales's satisfaction and approval of the discipline which characterised the Army, wherever the Prince has had occasion to inspect it. He has been struck by the steadiness under arms, the martial bearing, and the precision of the three arms at the Delhi Review. He had long entertained a hope of seeing an Indian Army which had exhibited such loyalty and courage side by side with their European comrades in many memorable contests, and is pleased to find that his anticipations are more than realised. It will therefore be his gratifying duty to inform the Queen that the armies of her Eastern Empire are in a state of high efficiency.

A HONG KONG telegram of January 24 states that Mr. Grosvenor and his party proceeded on their journey westward from Chung-King (not Ching-Kiang, in the Province of Yunnan, as at first erroneously reported) on the 3rd January. Chung-King is several hundred miles eastward of Ching-Kiang.

WE regret to hear that Sir Louis Mallet has been suffering from bilious fever, which compelled him to leave Calcutta for a voyage to the Sand Heads in quest of health. The attack however seems to have been so severe that he has since been ordered home at once by his doctors; thus leaving no small part of his mission unfulfilled.

ONE good result of the Prince's visit to India suggests itself in the Pioneer's announcement that Sir Salar Jung will probably visit England this year as the guest of the Duke of Sutherland. If this example should be widely followed by natives of yet higher rank than the Nizam's Chief Minister, we may hope to see England and India brought in time more closely together for their common good by the removal of that gulf of social indifference and misunderstanding which has hitherto kept them so far apart. More than once indeed, as in the case of the late Rajah of Kolhapur, we have seen Native Indian Princes welcomed in this country. But hitherto they have come but very seldom, and never as guests of English noblemen. If some of our leading nobles and gentry could go out in their turn as guests of Indian Rajahs and Nawábs, the good attainable from such exchange of courtesies might be great and lasting indeed.

IT is understood that Lord Lytton, who has been working hard in connection with his future duties ever since his return from Lisbon, is going out to India sooner than had been expected. It has also been stated that the Prince of Wales will leave India on his homeward voyage about the 3rd of February. If this be true, it would account for Lord Lytton's hastened departure to relieve Lord Northbrook, whose movements homeward must have depended on those of the Prince of Wales. The new Viceroy takes out for his Private Secretary Lieut. Col. Burne, C.B., who so ably filled the same office under Lord Mayo, and has since been employed on important political duties at the India Office.

IT seems probable that another vacancy in the Council of India will shortly be made by the retirement of Sir Henry Montgomery, the oldest of its existing members.

WE are glad to find that India has not had long to wait for the benefits of admission to the International Postal Union.

Apparently she owes small thanks to the English Post-office for the boon at length granted her by the Congress sitting at Berne. Curiously enough, it was France that set her English neighbours a good example by offering to bring her colonies into the Union on terms far more liberal than the English delegates were willing to concede to their own great dependency. They held out at first for a paltry reduction of twopence or so on letters vid Brindisi, on the miserable plea that the Post-office paid a good deal in subsidies to different Mail Companies. The French delegates on the other hand were ready to accept for the Indian possessions of France the same rates of postage which the United States and Egypt already enjoy. After some contention, it appears that the Committee of the Berne Congress have agreed to admit British-India and the French Colonies into the Union at a uniform rate of 50 centimes, or 5d. for a letter weighing 15 grammes, equivalent to half an ounce. From the 1st of July next it will be possible to send a letter to Bombay or Calcutta vid Brindisi for less than half the present rate of postage. The next sitting of the Congress will come off in London. It will then, we trust, be found feasible to extend to our Australasian Colonies and Chinese settlements the boon now assured to India.

WE notice with regret the death of Major-General Margary, R.E., on Friday, the 21st. The deceased officer, father of the Mr. Margary who was murdered at Manwain, never recovered the shock of his son's violent death. Shortly after learning the sad news he was seized with a paralytic stroke, which in a few months was followed by another, and this again by a third. General Margary went to Addiscombe in 1827, and in 1830 passed out into the Bombay Engineers at the head of his term. He served in the South Maratha campaign in 1844, was commanding Engineer at the siege of Samángurh, and first mounted the breach at the storming of the fort; was Field Engineer of the Sind Reserve Force during the war in Afghanistan, and received the thanks of the Governor-General in Council for his services. At the capture of Budarghar he was the only Engineer officer under fire from daylight until two P.M., with sixty men from the 3rd, 16th, 20th, and 23rd Madras Regiments, under Lieutenants Mardel and Augustus Layard. He retired from the Army in 1863, with the rank of Major-General, after thirty-three years' service.

WE now publish the following List of Retirements under G.G.O. No. 1, of 1875, in continuation of that published in A. I. M. of August 4, 1875:—

A CALCUTTA telegram announces the departure of the Karenni Boundary Commission, under Colonel Brown, from Rangoon on January 24. We are glad to see, by the way, that English envoys to the Court of Mandalay are forbidden henceforth to take off their boots before entering the presence of the King of Burmah. Such an order was all the more necessary, seeing that the Burmese Envoys at Calcutta wore patent leather shoes or boots, when they appeared before the Prince of Wales on the 27th December.

THE INDIAN SALT TAX.

NOT the least instructive part of the Indian Blue-book for 1873-74 is the Appendix, with its tables of figures showing the various changes made in the Customs Tariff, the fluctuations of revenue from Salt, Opium, and other taxes, and the yearly movements of the import and export trade from 1856 to 1873. Very significant are the figures which deal with the salt duties and the consumption of salt in particular. Between 1856 and 1872, the last year for which returns are given, the total consumption appears to have risen from twenty-two and two-thirds million maunds to about twenty-six and two-thirds million. The salt revenue on the other hand rose from £2,685,574 in the first-named year to £6,150,662 in 1873. At first glance this looks well, but closer scrutiny reveals some less pleasing results. In 1860, for example, while the duties were still generally low, India consumed only half a million maunds fewer than in 1873. This fact alone speaks volumes, and its eloquence is enhanced by the returns for 1861, when the consumption of salt fell off by four and a-half million maunds. In Bengal alone, where the duty, between December, 1859, and March, 1861, had been raised from Rs. 2.8 to Rs. 3 and then Rs. 3.4 a maund, the decline in consumption amounted to near three million maunds. A like increase of duty in Bombay and Madras produced results only less remarkable because the duties in those provinces were still much lower than in Bengal. In other provinces also a reduced consumption followed a rise in the duty. A year or two later the consumption began to rise again, but only twice has it exceeded the total for 1860. In 1872 Bengal consumed less salt by more than a million maunds than in 1860. In 1865 Madras consumed over eight million maunds, the highest point ever reached there; but a further increase of the duty led to a corresponding fall in the consumption. A subsequent increase of consumption was again checked by the enhanced duty of 1869; and in 1872-73 Madras consumed but very little more salt that in 1860.

The figures for Bombay and the Punjab show like fluctuations owing to like causes. In 1868 Bombay consumed six million maunds of salt, but the enhanced duty of the following year brought her consumption down below five million maunds in 1871. In the next year it sprang up again nearly a million, or about 700,000 maunds above the total for 1860. In like manner the Punjab consumed more salt in 1869, before the duty was raised to Rs. 3.1, than it has done since, and its total consumption in 1872 was very little higher than it had been twelve years before, when the duty was only Rs. 2.2.

The moral to be drawn from these figures seems to us plain enough. If scarcely more salt was consumed throughout India in 1872 than in 1860, we are driven to conclude either that the salt revenue has increased at the expense of salt-consumers, or else that much of the salt consumed has paid no duty. The latter alternative will not carry us far, in view of the difficulties opposed in most parts of India to the secret manufacture of untaxed salt. If good salt were easily to be had in this way, the practice of adulterating salt with magnesia, lime, and other foreign substances would be much less common than it is. We have therefore to fall back on the other alternative, and to admit that enhanced duties have checked the consumption of a prime necessary of life. While that consumption has stood still or declined during twelve years, the population of India must have increased by several millions, to say nothing of the cattle used for all kinds of purposes. No one probably eats more salt than is good for him, and in India, as a valued correspondent once pointed out, more salt is needed for each man's consumption than would suffice to maintain health among ourselves. The same thing may be said of the cattle. If neither the rayat nor his cattle can get as much salt as they need for sanitary purposes, they are sure to suffer in various ways. A tax of 600 per cent., if not more, on one great mainstay of life and health falls with crushing heaviness on millions of people whose means are barely adequate for their humble wants. Owing to the high price of pure salt, they have to season their food with villainous mixtures largely composed of sand and mud, which can hardly be considered wholesome aids to digestion. For want of pure and cheap salt, their bullocks die off from cattle plague, and themselves fall easy victims to cholera and other forms of disease. One would think that a Government which spends six millions in one year to avert death from famine might well risk a million or two in order to save vast numbers of men and cattle from dying of too little salt. Medical research has made out a clear connection between the spread of cholera and the lack of saline particles in the blood. A revenue of six millions a-year raised from a tax which makes salt a luxury may serve as a check on over-population, but it can hardly approve itself to the conscience of a Government sincerely anxious to rule its alien subjects for their own good. Can no way be found of abolishing the salt duties, or of lowering them to an uniform rate of a rupee a maund? If the former course be deemed too bold a venture in view of the difficulty of finding a safe fiscal substitute for so large a sum, it would surely be possible to try the latter, and to make up for any consequent loss of revenue by means of a very moderate tax on Indian tobacco.

THE OVERLAND TRADE ROUTE BETWEEN INDIA AND CHINA.

IT is one of the mysteries of Providence that great geographical discoveries are often attended by fatal events; as if some evil genius obstructed the march of intellect, and was to be propitiated only by the living sacrifice of the first pioneers; that after they have overcome the personal dangers by flood and field some foul fiend crops up from the soil, and for a time frustrates the good intentions of great Governments. India and China alone could furnish a volume filled with such catastrophes, and one of the most recent was the fate of Mr. Margary. With the position of a diplomatist at Pekin, well acquainted with the Chinese people and their language, and under the special protection of a passport from the Imperial authorities, he traversed the immense Empire from the east to the west, and arrived at Bhamo, in Burmese territory, the first Englishman that ever accomplished that enterprise, if not unmolested, at least in safety and good health, accompanied by four or five unarmed domestics. The inconveniences they experienced were not of a serious character; the Chinese mandarins were careful as to their accommodation and supplies, their lives and property were protected, and the curiosity of the natives was their greatest inconvenience; but probably it was not greater than a small party of Chinese in their pig-tails and national costumes would have met with in a pedestrian journey from the Land's End to John O'Groats.

At Bhamo Mr. Margary met by appointment a commission of British officers under Colonel Brown, escorted by a moderate party of Sikh soldiers, provided like himself with a Chinese passport, their intention being to open a commercial route into the interior of China, a route from time immemorial maintained betwixt Burmah and China, but since the Taiping revolution much obstructed. All things seeming favourable, Margary went on in advance of Brown's party to provide accommodation and supplies, when he and all his party were murdered at Manwyne, his cook alone escaping with his life. Colonel Browne's party following him were also attacked by an overwhelming force, and were obliged to beat a retreat into Burmah, under cover of their rifles.

Fortunately the greater portion of Margary's Journals had been sent seriatim to his superiors at Pekin, and by last mail we were given to understand that they were published at Shanghai, under the care of the British Ambassador. When we are enabled to obtain a copy we shall be willing to give a few extracts most interesting.

In the meantime a Joint Commission of Chinese and Burmese officers appointed to examine into the outrages at Manwain are on their way up the great river, the Yang-tsi. By late telegram we heard of their having passed I-chang, and probably they have now left their boats, and are proceeding overland to their destination, along "The Great Silver and Gold Road," that unites the navigable branches of the Yang tsi and Irawadi, eventually we hope to throw the commerce of India, Burmah and China upon one line, and make it one of the greatest thoroughfares in the world.

We had written thus much, when we were startled by the appearance in the Times of a telegram from Rangoon, of the 17th inst., that 200 European and 100 Native soldiers had, by orders received from the British Ambassador at Mandalay, been appointed as an escort to accompany Mr. Stuart to Bhamo, intended no doubt to act in conjunction with the mission from Shanghai. This is the most important demonstration that has yet been made upon that frontier, and we shall watch its progress with the interest to which it is entitled.

We wish that the contemplated investigation could have been carried out without such a display of force. The Burmese most unwillingly gave consent to the passage through the country of the large escort, and we shall be glad to learn that the Chinese throw no obstacles in the way of their entering Yunnan, which is open to doubt. Probably a smaller body of men would have been inadequate to give protection to life and property through the Kah-Khyen Hills, inhabited by warlike tribes of savages, who acknowledge allegiance to no Government, and who live by plunder and black-mail. Very recently a large caravan proceeding from Yunnan to Bhamo was attacked by these people. One man was killed, several were wounded and twenty-four loaded mules carried off to their strongholds. There is otherwise nothing difficult about the journey from Bhamo into Yunnan. There is water conveyance to Tait-Kau, at the foot of the hills, which may be crossed over in three days by bullocks or mules, or even elephants. The mountains are not lofty enough to be closed by snow even in winter. Yunnan is a high table land, in a corner of which some branches of the Irawadi take their rise, and cut across the Kah-Khyen range of mountains into Burmah proper. The country up till April is perfectly healthy; but any further remarks are unnecessary when we must soon have authentic information on every point from eye-witnesses upon the spot. M. C.

MILITARY.—On the departure of our late Commander-in-Chief, Sir F. P. Haines, on relinquishing his command, Major-General Charles Elmhirst, the next senior officer on the Staff, was appointed temporarily to succeed Sir F. P. Haines, pending the arrival of Sir Neville Chamberlain. Major-General Elmhirst has consequently assumed temporary charge of the Commander-in-Chief's office and duties.

REMITTANCES FROM INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In the Money Market article of the Times of to-day, the writer proposes that the Indian Government should raise a temporary Loan in London, which may have the double purpose of benefiting the owners of silver bullion and of repairing the mischief caused last August by the Under-Secretary of State for India.

When Parliament meets, it will be interesting to hear what sort of apology the Under-Secretary can offer for having borrowed two and a-half millions sterling in India, where it was not wanted, instead of in London, where it was wanted.

I beg to call your attention to your article on the last Indian Loan, in your paper of the 23rd August.

The words of the writer in the Times are as follows:—"But if the Indian Government were to raise a temporary loan on this side to meet their requirements, a very favourable effect would be produced on the silver market, and also on the Indian exchange."

It is not desirable that a British Government should incur more debts for the purpose of repairing its blunders in August last.—Your obedient servant, T.

Jan. 28.

The impropriety of recklessly running into debt is shown by the present condition of Turkey and Egypt, and by the financial difficulties existing throughout the United States of America.

IRRIGATION IN THE BENGAL PRESIDENCY.—V.

To the scientific mind of course anything short of perfection is intolerable. A system of irrigation which works in one year one-fifth short of its performance in the previous one (the difference between irrigated acreage of 1873-74 and 1872-73 on the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series) is, to that mind, not a system. But the Revenue officer finds that, on the whole, no loss is incurred, that the difference is only between a greater and a less return—the average of which returns in a series of years shows a handsome profit to both the cultivator and the Government. He sees that the utmost shortcoming is productive—not only of no scarcity or distress—but of no necessity for remission of Government revenue and of no impoverishment to the cultivators—and he is fairly content. Had the working power of the system fallen short of this it would have been necessary to bring it up to this standard. A higher standard is of course obtainable,—and up to the point where the cost of attainment of such standard will produce proportionate returns to the Government and the cultivator he advocates such—but no further. And here it is that the Revenue officers of the Indian Empire, with their grovelling considerations of pounds, shillings, and pence, are at issue with science.

Here, then, is the first reason why irrigation in India has not paid. Because the axiom has been too hastily accepted that to be useful it must be perennial. The particular instance of the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series has been taken, but the conclusion drawn in that case appears to apply with still more force where the rainfall is greater and wells more numerous. In the track irrigated by that Series the average rainfall is under six inches a year, whereas that of the Doab, the districts between the Ganges and the Jumna traversed by the Ganges Canal, is 30 to 40 inches per acre. This rainfall is supplemented, according to the computation of Colonel Baird Smith, in 1860, by 70,000 masonry wells and 280,000 temporary or unrevetted wells. Colonel Baird Smith puts the irrigated acreage of these at 1,670,000 acres, but that is assuming the very lowest power of a well where water is, as in the Agra district, 40 to 50 feet below the surface. In other districts of the Doab, however, for instance, Allyghur, water is only 25 feet below the surface, and the acreage of a well instead of 4 1 5th acres is 30 acres. The Doab, then, would seem to be eminently an instance of a tract where cultivation would be sufficiently assisted by a supply of canal irrigation much less than perennial; where, in fact, such is only required to supplement existing resources. One of the arguments urged in favour of a considerable increase in the water-rates is that the people, getting canal water cheaper than the cost of irrigating from their wells, have thrown the latter out of gear, and trust exclusively to the canals and the rain; and also that they over irrigate in view of getting larger crops, and thereby exhaust the soil. The object is, by raising the price of water, to drive the people back to the use of their wells, and thus to enable the canal water to go further. In other words, the Government aims at a large area partially irrigated by the Ganges Canal instead of a smaller area perennially and mainly irrigated thereby. Evidently, then, it was unnecessary to go to a vast expense to bring a perennial supply of water from the foot of the Himalayas, if this object could be attained in another way. How vast might have been the body of water poured into the Doab during the five months' rise of the Ganges and Jumna by a system of mere irrigation canals constructed at the same cost as the Ganges Canal. No doubt there would not have been in such a scheme the soundness and completeness of the Ganges Canal system; the duty done per cubic foot of discharge would have been less, possibly, also, the value of produce per acre; there would doubtless have been occasional fluctuations in the yearly supply, producing here and there deterioration of insufficiently watered crops. But the objects of the Government and the people would have been served; the cultivation would have been sufficiently assisted in ordinary years, and the statistics already given can leave little doubt that such schemes would have paid much better than the Ganges Canal can ever hope to do.

Of course years do occur, like 1868-69, when the rainfall is less than half the average, or, like 1861, when it fails altogether. Then a cultivated acreage maintained by such canal supply, by wells and by a thirty to forty inch rainfall together, will be seriously diminished by the failure of one of these resources, necessitating the concentration of the supply from the other two upon a much smaller area. But, as we have just explained, this is intended to be equally true of the perennial canals. The Ganges Canal will not, when the new rates come into play, maintain but only a first the cultivation of the land it reaches, supplementing the irrigation of the wells and the rain. If the rain fails, therefore, the cultivator will have to contract the area of his operations in proportion to the failure of that source of irrigation, maturing, as in the case of the inundation canals, only such area of crop as the canal water and his well can completely irrigate. For this purpose the canals, whether inundation or perennial, are equally sufficient. Drawing their supply from a source which is unaffected by a failure of rainfall in the Plains, they mitigate the effects of such failure, and tone down a failure into a scarcity or a scarcity into a mere bad year. The melting snows and the autumnal rainfall of the Himalayas, which cause the five months' rise of the rivers issuing therefrom, are practically as much to be depended upon as the springs and fountains which afford the normal supply of those rivers. The same arguments apply with still greater force to the schemes in progress of development on the river Son. The Behar rainfall being fifty inches, it does not require much supplementing in average years, and it evidently cannot be necessary or profitable to go to a great cost to afford perennial irrigation. Certainly, inundation irrigation would not be so certain on the Son as on the Himalayan rivers, for the Central Indian plateaux, whence it springs, have no snow supply, and probably their rainfall may occasionally fail. But, then, neither is the outlay of four millions, now being incurred thereon, destined to tap a perennial supply. The works are being constructed at Dehri, where, for months in the year, the vast bed of the river lies dry; and failures or fluctuations of flood supply will affect this vast scheme only in a less degree than they would affect inundation canals.

Further east it is unnecessary to go, as there we get into the region of philanthropic canals, the merits of which cannot be discussed on the mere material basis of financial prospects. There, whether permanent or inundation, they are equally undesired by the people and commercially hopeless of profit, save in most exceptional years. When those exceptional years arrive they are equally likely to be rendered unserviceable by the very failure of rainfall which would cause their services to be desired. It does not, of course, follow that the failure of rain in Orissa or Midnapur should be accompanied by failure in Chutteesghur and Chota Nagpur, where the rivers rise which feed the canals of those districts, but it is possible, and even likely. The last complete failure of rainfall there was in 1868.

To return to the Punjab. The whole tract to be traversed by the trunk of the Sirhind Canal has a rainfall of 20 to 25 inches, and is supplied with wells. This irrigation ordinarily amply suffices, and the country is thoroughly well cultivated. It may be said with confidence that here, as in the Doab, a costly water supply will not pay. For a considerable distance along the western course of its branches, up to, roughly, the 75th parallel of longitude, though well irrigation is not remunerative, yet the rainfall, though small (15 to 20 inches), suffices to mature the crops in the light sandy loam of that region. In ordinary years the country is a sheet of cultivation at both harvests, and there will be no such extension or improvement of cultivation as will repay the supply of water at a great cost. Further west, where the rainfall diminishes to 8 to 10 inches, irrigation is much required in ordinary years, and to be useful the duration and supply must be ample and constant. Thus it is only in parts of the Ferozepore and Sirsa districts, and of the Pateala State, to be irrigated by the Sirhind Canal; in the Montgomery and part of the Lahor districts, irrigated by the Bari Doab and Upper Sutlej Canals; and in the Bhawalpur State, that we find—throughout the Bengal Presidency—tracts which are entirely dependent for their irrigation upon canals, and the supply to which must be therefore ample and constant. Elsewhere it is only required to supplement rainfall or wells, or both. Nowhere need it be perennial, if perennial irrigation can only be supplied, as has hitherto been the experience, at a loss to Government.

Even in the Montgomery district the irrigation is mainly supplied by the Upper Sutlej inundation canals, which run but six months in the year. In the Bhawalpur State some six or seven out of the forty-nine canals are generally perennial in their supply, but the rest run merely when the river rises above its winter zero. None of them have permanent heads, and perennity is obtained only by good alignment and deep digging. In fact, canal water, during the Indian winter, is a luxury, not a necessity. It is very advantageous, but only if afforded at a cost remunerative to Government. Where the autumnal rain is ample the moisture of the air during the winter months is sufficient to mature the spring crop when the soil has been thoroughly saturated before sowing; and where this is not the case, the rainfall, such as it is, comes mostly in the winter, and gives the impulse requisite to develop the grain, the needful saturation having been given in the autumn by wells or canals, or both. Sugarcane, tobacco and vegetables require, no doubt, early spring irrigation, and, where the canals are merely inundation, can only be cultivated to such extent as well irrigation is available, but cotton, indigo, oilseeds and cereals can be raised on inundation supply, and these are the commonest and most profitable staples of cultivation.

This concludes one branch of the argument. The writer claims to have shown that one secret of the unprofitableness of Indian Canals is the determination to have perennial irrigation at all costs. That it is the neglect to consider carefully, before undertaking to irrigate a tract, the minimum of supply and duration of irrigation which will absolutely suffice for that tract, and the maximum of expense by which the outlay requisite to secure that minimum can be profitably exceeded in view of securing greater perfection of system and, consequently, larger gross results. We will presently proceed to consider whether perennity—which, as before said, is very advantageous if it can be profitably obtained—cannot be secured without the extravagant cost which has hitherto swamped all our irrigational undertakings.

But first a few further remarks regarding the inundation system will not be out of place. Let us compare, inter se, canals on that principle, which we have hitherto only contrasted with the permanent works of irrigation. From the table of statistics before given (p. 28), we observe that the Upper Sutlej series returns only 2·09 per cent. on capital (in 1873-4 this series showed a loss of 8 per cent. on capital, but this was from exceptional causes), while the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series returns 13·4 per cent. The former is one-third only of the length of the latter, and its irrigated acreage is little more than half that of the lower series, but its charges for establishment in 1873·4 were £5,506 to £3,918 on the latter. The percentage in the first case on the gross average income claimed by the Punjab Government is 41·7 per cent., in the second case it is only 11·7 per cent. on the exceptionally small gross income of 1873-4. The latter percentage is not as low as it might be—Dewan Sawun Mull doubtless administered those canals at a much smaller cost—but still it compares very favourably with the more scientifically administered series,—as does also, though in a far less degree, the Indus series (returning 6·19 per cent. on capital), whose administration charges for 1873·4 were £6,065 on a gross income only two thirds of that of the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series for the same year—or 27·5 per cent. on its income.

The fact is, that administration charges crush inundation canals managed by the Irrigation Department. On the permanent canals they are necessarily high (e. g. 23 to 35 per cent. on the gross income of the Bari Doab and 20 to 28 per cent. on that of the Western Jumna Canal) because such, being highly scientific works, absolutely require skilled management—though even on them it can hardly be doubted that some reduction could be effected by the more extended employment of native agency. But on canals like the Upper Sutlej series it is evidently preposterous that more than two fifths of the gross income should be spent on Direction and Executive establishment—merely for the ordinary repairs, maintenance distribution of water, and collection of water-rate of the canals. The result is, no doubt, better working in an engineering point of view—the canals run earlier, they close later, a better duty is got out of each cubic foot of water—but the result does not repay the cost.

Compare even the most favourable of the above with the Bhawalpur system of irrigation described at p. 49 of the India-office Blue-book previously quoted—a system worked by the Revenue officers with only scientific direction. The 49 canals of the Bhawalpur State, of above 1,100 miles total length, and whose average irrigated acreage for the three years past is 301,856 acres, cost for administration in 1873-74 only £4,068. Their actual return in increased land revenue (there are no other items of income except value of statute labour, which, of course—as in the case of the Lower Sutlej and Chinab and the Indus series—appears on both sides of the account) is not stated in the report, but was doubtless very great, owing to the high revenue rates prevailing in the State. But, for the sake of comparison with the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series, we will derive by proportion—based on the gross income of the latter on its acreage for 1873-74—a gross income for the Bhawalpur canals, on their acreage for the same year, of £49,708. The charge for administration falls on this income at 8·18 per cent.—compared with 11·7 per cent. on the Lower Sutlej and Chinab series. This calculation neglects 20,000 acres of State forest watered by the Bhawalpur canals.

The inference is that, as regards the inundation canals at any rate, the Irrigation Department should confine itself to purely scientific work, and that these canals, though very paying if inexpensively worked, will appear, like the Upper Sutlej series, commercially unprofitable if managed on the same system as high-class works, such as the Bari Doab Canal.

On the high-class canals reductions in the cost of administration will not much affect the results of the undertakings. On the Bari Doab Canal, for instance, the administration charges are under £20,000 for 1873-74. If these were reduced even one-half it would but slightly increase the percentage of return on the vast capital cost, viz., from 2·29 to 2 73 per cent. The fact will still remain, that perennity and high-class irrigation obtained by methods so costly as those hitherto adopted do not, and cannot hope to, pay.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE PRINCE'S VISIT.

The Friend of India cannot too warmly applaud his Royal Highness himself for the graceful and gracious manner which he has exhibited from first to last in his intercourse with all, whether Natives or Europeans. A cold, haughty, and repellent air, or even a stiff, constrained behaviour, though not lacking in any of the external civilities, would have produced much evil fruit. But all who knew the character of our genial Prince, knew that there is scarcely another Englishman who could have presented so acceptable a presence to the Natives of India as himself. We cannot more highly eulogise his demeanour towards all, and especially towards the Native Chiefs, than by saying that he never seemed to be, and never was, acting a part, but has preserved throughout his own simple and natural air and character. And nothing better was to be desired. If all the benefits that the most sanguine among us expected from his visit should not be experienced, the fault, if there be a fault, will not lie at the Prince's door. And when he leaves India at the close of his tour we are certain that he will carry nothing with him inconsistent with the kindliest wishes for his person from all who have seen or come in contact with him in India. Believing, as we think we have good reason to do, that the Prince has made an exceedingly favourable impression on the Princes and the higher classes in India, we think it reasonable to infer, what we have little means of otherwise ascertaining, that the influence of his visit on the great inarticulate heart of the Indian masses has not failed to produce some faint beats of genuine loyalty. If there are vast multitudes who have not seen the Prince, and will not see him, there are multitudes who have seen him and have tongues to tell what they have seen and heard, and the rumours that will circulate through the length and breadth of India, though doubtless vague and often bewildering, will tend to produce among the people a more definite idea of the personality of the Sovereign Power which seems somehow to shape their destinies. And the spectacle of the Native Princes assembled to do honour to the son of the distant Queen, and the rumour of the fact among those who have not seen the spectacle, cannot but have a powerful influence on the minds of the people who so reverence the Princes of the land. They may in their hearts continue to cherish the belief that the glory and magnificence of some of their own Princes still outshine any foreign pomp or grandeur, but where the Princes combine to pay honour and loyality the people will not be wanting in these feelings.

THE EUROPEAN GARRISON IN INDIA.

The Pioneer remarks that the periodical service of British regiments in India is undoubtedly of great advantage to both countries. It enlarges the experience and adds to the military training of the home regiments; and the example of strict discipline and soldier-like smartness shown by them has always been acknowledged as very advantageous to the local army. We have not, therefore, been advocating an exclusively local army of Europeans for India; but, for the reasons above shown, it clearly appears that at least one-half to two-thirds of the European forces in India should be local, and entirely under the control of the Indian Government. Accepting the opinions of the best judges, that a European garrison of from 50,000 to 60,000 men is required for India, the local army should consist of at least from 30,000 to 40,000 Europeans. Cavalry and artillery take a much longer time to train than infantry. Cavalry service in India can, however, with great advantage, be performed by native troopers; while artillery training should be exclusively confined to Europeans. A very large proportion of this force should therefore consist of artillery,—in fact, the artillery of the local European army should be strong enough to be in proportion to the entire army of India, Native and European. Thirty battalions of infantry, five regiments of cavalry, and forty batteries of artillery, including five or six batteries of Gatlings, would, we believe, constitute a force of Europeans which would make India perfectly secure against foreign or domestic foes; and such an Indian army might in many ways serve as a pattern to the authorities at home. The European troops of the Indian Government have always been, and would continue to be, treated with a generous liberality. The warrant grade would be open to every steady and intelligent soldier; the pension rules would be liberal; and India would possess, what England has not seen for many a day, a contented army. These Indo-European regiments would require to be officered far more liberally than European regiments are at present; liberal allowance would have to be made for absence on account of sickness and private affairs; and these regiments would form the best school for training, and the best avenue for procuring officers for the Native regiments. Young officers, candidates for appointments with Native regiments, would pass through a school of instruction in regiments localised, and looking to India as their home, where foolish race prejudices were not systematically inculcated, as is so often the case in the mess-rooms of British regiments; and they would no longer consider service in a Native corps as a degrading refuge for the impecunious, an opinion which is not unfrequently expressed in the regiments from which candidates for the Staff Corps are now sought. There might, indeed, be a risk of stagnation as regards promotion in such local regiments. This was felt in the old Company's European as well as Native army, and would, no doubt, recur again; for doubtless the officers of this force would consist almost entirely of men who made arms their profession, and would continue to serve until disabled by age or wounds. But a fair flow of promotion could always be maintained by transferring to the Staff Corps all officers who sought for or obtained staff employ, retaining on the rolls of the regiments only those prepared to devote themselves to regimental duty. In short, while a local European army appears to be essential to the security of our Indian empire, its establishment in other respects appears to be fraught with many advantages, and with no drawbacks, and we cannot but believe that a time must come when the subject will meet with the earnest consideration of the Government of India.

THE EUROPEAN HOSPITAL.—The European General Hospital is likely to make the Government of Bombay famous. His Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway has sent by last mail, through the Norwegian Consul, Mr. Gumpert, a cheque for twenty guineas in aid of the Hospital Endowment Fund. A local journal says if the Government holds its hand a little longer perhaps a public subscription may be raised in Europe to build a new hospital for Bombay. We hear, however, that the Secretary of State for India has now taken the matter up, and called for all the papers on the subject.

SCENERY OF THE INDUS.—The scenery of the Indus from Kotri to Sukkur has been, I believe, branded as tame and uninteresting. I think this is cruelly unjust. Truly the country is flat, but surely Dutch landscape painters have shown what delicate beauties exist in the flattest and dullest parts of God's earth; and I cannot help thinking that in the presence of great mountains, snow and ice, of changing clouds of gorgeous colours, one's sense of delicate and refined beauty is apt to be blunted, overpowered by coarse admiration and awe of vivid colour, gigantic size, and extreme contrast of light and shade. And to live always on pâte de foit gras and plum-pudding is bad for the digestion. But, looking on less awful, so-called tamer scenery infinitely delicate, refined beauties may, with little search be found, beauties that may, probably, do exist, equally in the grandest scenery, but which cannot there be distinguished in the presence of gorgeous colour and mighty forms. I am afraid, after what I have written, to try and describe any beauties of the Indus. But I can write this without falling into error. There are, all day and at every hour, constant changes and soft gradations of colour to be seen on the land and on the water near the steamer. You cannot see the river but from a steamer; the banks for two miles or so on both sides are not to be trusted to remain more than a few hours, and far back in its track the water is broken, rising in a long line of high muddy waves; but all round there is complete stillness, the surface smooth, shining like steel, only broken now and again by the splash of a fish, or scratched, with momentary scratches, by the feet of a dipping bird. High-pooped, great-sailed, native boats stand out here and there on the horizon, sometimes against flat stretches of sandy land, sometimes against darker stretches of deep forests; and against the blue sky are the sharp, but pale, outlines of low, rocky, far-distant mountains. But sometimes the river has covered its own domain of sand to its furthest limit, and attacked the lands of the forests beyond, and then, on the very edge of the water, stand masses of dark trees, which, as the steamer toils on close under them, throw down on it deep shade. But the landscapes—for there is constant change—are most beautiful in the afternoon, when the sun has passed the zenith, and its rays, instead of striking down on, come across the earth. Do you know Cuyp's pictures? Journeying on the Indus, a little stretch, very little stretch, of the imagination, to persuade yourself that the tall white sails on the horizon stand up from heavy, solid, Dutch hulls, and not from flimsy, high-pooped, native vessels, and every one of the river's landscapes is a perfect example of Cuyp's art in nature. Each picture is highly finished, but softly and without apparent labour; there are infinite gradations of delicate tints; not changing abruptly, but imperceptibly, from shade to shade and colour to colour, even to the horizon, where the changeless blue arch of heaven is fixed. And over all, sky and water, sand, trees, white sails and distant hills, there is a tender, liquid light, and when the day is almost finished and the sun begins to set, then—no, it is cruelly unjust to brand the scenery of the Indus as tame and uninteresting.—Pioneer Correspondent.

THE PRINCE AT BANKIPUR.

BANKIPUR, Jan. 5.—Amid the wonderfully fertile plains of Behar, which seems well entitled to be called the "Garden of India," Bankipur occupies the proud position of being a thriving city with over 150,000 inhabitants. It is the point where the indigo-planters are fond of meeting, and, moreover, it contains the principal civil offices of the Patna division. The indigo-planters are a strong force in the land hereabouts, and their flourishing condition may be guessed from the fact that they have raised among them a Behar mounted corps, which consists of over 100 powerful, well-mounted, and well-dressed men. Bankipur station was dressed with flags and bunting. On the racecourse, about a mile from the station, a very large shamianah, or open tent, was erected, and beautified within with lamps, flowers, and flags. The Rajas of Tirhut, Champaran, and Darbangah—names which were famous during the last so-called famine—were assembled on the racecourse, with a large number of followers and no fewer than 360 elephants, all of which were caparisoned with considerable richness. Certainly the appearance of the Rajas and their retinue gave forth no token of a famine having raged in the land not many months ago. The guard of honour at the station was supplied by the 109th Regiment from the military head quarters of the district, Dinapore; the Behar Volunteer Cavalry waited outside the station ready to escort the Prince to the maidan; and a considerable portion of the line of route was guarded by members of the Volunteer force of the East India Railway Company. The delay in the arrival of the Royal train made the various Volunteer Corps rather uneasy, but, nevertheless, when the Prince, after having further tried their patience by waiting at the station to take chota hazri, appeared among them feelings of loyalty overcame every other sentiment. The Prince was conducted to the large tent on the maidan, along a route which was crowded with natives, who had come, in some instances, long distances from the surrounding country to catch a glimpse of him. On arrival at the shamiannah, whither he was accompanied by Sir Richard Temple and Mr. Metcalf, the principal civil functionary in the district, a large number—about three hundred I should think—of official and other gentlemen who had rendered services during the Famine, were presented to him; after which he and a number of the presentees sat down to a breakfast which had been provided by Sir Richard Temple. This business over, the Prince went outside, where he saw the host of elephants move in procession. He was much amused with the appearance of one of the monsters, which had been painted with huge black and yellow stripes to represent a tiger! The Raja of Bettiah brought forward a unique turnout for the Prince's inspection—a diminutive pair of bullocks yoked in a neat little cart. The bullocks are of a breed which is now becoming rare in India—the Gyna breed. They did not stand more than three feet high to the top of their humps, and were perfectly shaped; and as they stood with their horns gilded and their backs clothed with a rich green velvet cloak, they looked exceedingly pretty. When the Prince had admired the Lilliputian equipage, the Raja presented it to him. The Prince accepted the gift with much satisfaction, and probably the London public will yet be much surprised by the appearance in Rotten Row of what will be the most astonishing turnout in England. After the Raja's present, the officers of the 109th Regiment gave the Prince another curiosity—a pet rabbit named Tumbo, which has been in the regiment for many years, and whose chief peculiarity is that he cannot bear the sight of anybody not wearing a red coat!—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

LUCKNOW—PAST AND PRESENT.

LUCKNOW, Jan. 8.—Little did I think, as I took my long look at the gilded domes and minarets of Lucknow nigh eighteen years ago, that I should ever see it again! The Head-Quarters Column had halted on the rising ground by the Dilkoosha, and a train of doolies were passing along the dusty road hard by, when Sir W. Peel, who had just been helped out of his room there into a litter next mine, exclaimed, "Well, I don't want to see it again. But it is certainly one of the most beautiful cities in the world if you are not too near it." And so it was—the great expanse of domes, minarets, cupolas surmounted by light cusps all gilt and burnished, the lines of stately-looking buildings, palaces, and mansions, rising out of an ocean of the brightest foliage, gave an idea of great magnificence, which was, however, European rather than Oriental in its character, despite the Mussulman mosques. It was a combination of Paris and Constantinople. The gallant sailor was doomed never to be vexed with the sight of the place before which he met the wound which led to his death. If he could have come back now, he would have been hard set to recognise the once familiar sites against which his guns had thundered in November, 1857, and in March, 1858, with such terrible effect. The hand of the destroyer man has been upon some, the hand of the creator Nature has also been laid with surprising effect on others. Domes, minarets, cupolas, and buildings are for the most part there, but their surroundings and connections are all gone. Many of the jewels are left, but they are without the settings. The streets are grass-covered walks. Where houses once were thick as they are in Lambeth there are now gardens, parks, and pleasant shady drives. The wealth of trees and shrubs which has sprung up all over the great suburbs that lie between the ruins of the Residency and the Martinière upsets every attempt of the memory to identify cherished or memorable spots. Even Dr. Fayrer had some slight difficulty till his eye beceme accustomed to the scene to make out exactly places the outlines of which must have been traced in blood to a survivor of the memorable siege. But if one who turned to gaze upon the fair show yet made by the captured capital of Oude in 1858 had been told that the Prince of Wales, then a lad of sixteen, would come out to India to be the guest of Nawabs and Rajas, and that he would inspect the ruins of Lucknow, he would, amid all his incredulity and surprise, have said, "Should the Prince come, I hope he will be able to see what we had to do, that he may judge of the way in which we did it."

The fact is that Lucknow is gone—the Residency is in ruins, and not a bank, parapet or wall is left to indicate the conditions under which it was defended. When the city was captured most of the inhabitants fled; many, many thousands, indeed, stole away, leaving their houses empty, and whole quarters deserted as soon as the bombardment began to tell, and Outram from the north and Clyde from the south rained shells into it. Only the fighting men—the "budmashes," sepoys and rebels—held on, and when they fled to the Moosabagh and the British and Nepaulese had complete possession of the vast area of silent habitations, it became evident that if the quarters near the buildings which it was desirable to preserve for public purposes were left standing, in all likelihood the people would come back to them, and being but a disaffected race and much attached to the deposed and rebellious dynasty, would constitute a source of danger. Therefore it was decided as part of the scheme for the defence of Lucknow, should it ever be necessary to sweep away all the houses to the east of the great line of Royal Palaces from Bank's Bungalow-road to the Residency, to level the houses near the river, and to make a clear sweep of the vicinity of the Muchee Bawma, which is now a very formidable work, and which may be considered in some degree deserving the name of "The Fort," by which it is commonly known.—Times Correspondent.

THE ILLUMINATIONS IN CALCUTTA.

Yet I am sure I did not go to the illumination with any partial prepossession. I had begun by missing my party, in whose company I was to have joined in the procession under great but unexplained advantages. At first I thought of going to sulk, like Achilles, in my tents and allowing Briseis and Chryseis to do their worst upon someone else. Luckily, however, for the illumination, which would otherwise, of course, have been en pure perte (quia caret vate sacro) for want of a chronicler, I was picked up by a kind friend, who gave me a seat on the box of his carriage. The first thing we did by way of saving time was to get jammed hard into a block, which lasted full forty minutes. By the expenditure of these forty, however, we gained perhaps a start of two, for when once the débâcle began, the stream ran off freely enough. The moral is that on no occasion, and for no purpose (unless of course you are a pickpocket), is it worth while to get into a crowd. After this everything went on wheels. It was impossible to go wrong. No race-course was ever so distinctly demarcated as by the dense crowds which lined both sides of the road throughout the whole five miles of the illumination, for this was the peculiarity of the illumination. Calcutta did not express its exultation at the presence of its future Sovereign by lighting up miscellaneously, but by illuminating, very brilliantly, one particular circle of roads and streets. Out of this circle you could not bolt—the crowd, and indeed the police, made that impossible,—and in fact outside this circular course there was no illumination, nothing to see. This round of fire, however, was five miles long, and took you from one to two hours to traverse. First, it led you down Chowringhee, the aristocratic, then through a portion of the European commercial quarter; then, for more than two miles, through purely native bazaars, after which it emerged again into broad streets blazing with light, where some of the greatest English shops are situated, along Dalhousie-square, past Government House, once more to the solemnly beautiful Maidan and princely Chowringhee. What part of this circuit was most admirable? This is very difficult to answer, if we put the Maidan out of the question. That was a poem—I mean a poem of real poetry, and beyond rivalry; I shall never forget it, any more than I could the sail back from Elephanta. But other things beside the illumination itself concurred to make the illumination round the Maidan such a scene of magic; chiefly the great black space of the Maidan itself in front. Here there was no such flood and torrent of light as in the streets near Government House and Dalhousie-square, where both sides of the road were lighted up profusely, and reverberated each other's blaze. It is very difficult to single out individual buildings as pre-eminent in brilliancy, they ran each other so close. I think, however, I remember that for taste, together with splendour, Osler's and Hamilton's places of business distanced the competition of their immediate neighbourhood. Government House was particularly modest in its efforts; perhaps, it was not thought fair to eclipse "private enterprise." The High Court looked glorious. The Museum, a building at present stunted of its designed proportions, had had these fraudulently simulated in bamboo framework for the purpose of illumination, and was as magnificently successful as any—the most prosperous impostor in this age of audacious impostures. The fiery outline which the Museum exhibited is that which (nobody can doubt after the admiration its uncurtailed proportions attracted) it now unquestionably will attain. One of the most original (though it was an accurate copy) and effective devices was shown at the house of the Foreign Secretary in Chowringhee. It was the pattern, on an enormous scale, of some beautiful native scrollwork, like the perforated stone of Deeg, Chunar, or Agra, only in colours. It was very curious, novel, and pretty. But I should never cease if I once launched out in the sea of specification.—Pioneer Correspondent.

STATION TALK.

CALCUTTA, Dec. 24.—Oh! there cannot really be a doubt about it: Calcutta, after all, is the capital of India. It would be invidious and useless to reason out the matter. A glance suffices: si argumentum requiras circumspice. Bombay may have ten or a dozen acres of stately and substantial edifices such as no similar area in Calcutta can show, and no doubt the native city and native population of Bombay are more striking and picturesque than those of either Calcutta or Madras. But a great many things go to a capital, and Bombay is no more the capital of India than Odessa is of Russia. Why is it, by-the-bye, that in India the traveller is so often reminded of Russia? Verily, extremes do touch. There is no city in the world more unlike St. Petersburg than Calcutta, and yet—where the occult resemblance lies, I am sure I don't know—St. Petersburg is the one city with which you instinctively compare it. I regret to treat the pretensions of Bombay to the primacy among Indian towns with ridicule. The people there have made so much of their opportunities that it is almost a shame these were so limited. Why did not Providence give Bombay more ground? But even Calcutta is not seen to the greatest advantage at this moment. To struggle to show oneself off is not the surest way to do so. A pretty woman, indeed, does not lose by being caught at her toilette; but a city does, and Calcutta is sadly disfigured just now by its efforts at beautification. Every public building, and almost every private house, is bristling with bamboos and scaffolding as if the town were in the raw process of erection. These are the preparations for the grand illumination of to-night, but meanwhile the whole place looks dishevelled and unfinished. Then the maidan, which ordinarily gives, by its unincumbered vastness, such an air of regal serenity to the European quarter of Calcutta, is now broken up and frittered away into patches by long lines of tents every here and there, obstructing the continuity of view. Then many of the shops, and nearly all the offices, are shut, giving a false look of Sunday to the place. Some atonement for all this may be found in the numerous native chiefs—some splendid with jewels, and all contributing colour and variety to the scene—who, with long trains of mounted followers, are scouring the roads in all directions, on their way to pay visits of ceremony to great English officials or to each other. They make rather a dust, but they give a look of romance, and I more than pardon them. I am very much struck by the progress which ideas of neatness and finish have made among Indian princes. Formerly the sowari of even the biggest Rajah gave the notion quite as much of dirt as magnificence. There was a draggled and poverty-stricken look in it, with all its display and expense. The Prince might be ablaze with diamonds, and the leading horsemen in his cavalcade might have some degree of uniformity in their uniforms; but desinit in piscem, the train always got fishy towards the rear. Now, here the troops of the great military Princes (such as Sindia, Patiala, or Holkar), and the followers of the civilian Princes (such as Burdwan, Vizianagram, and Benares) are as tidy and complete in the details of their equipment as British soldiers under the eye of a martinet adjutant. Their carriages, too, are well-appointed now, and the horses well-matched, well-broken, and well-groomed. But the equipages of Calcutta altogether are surprisingly well got up. At Bombay it seemed to me that, except the Governor's, and those of a few Parsees, the carriages were second-hand, and the horses ponies, when they were not rats; but here, carriages and horses alike are almost up to London mark, and they are innumerable. Everybody must be very rich here, or nearly everybody must be living above his income. This impression is confirmed on noticing how richly the women dress. I am not speaking of the wives and daughters of the two or three hundred great officials or merchant princes, and I make allowance for the singularity of the occasion, when all Calcutta is en fête, and visitors have poured in from all parts of the mofussil. But still I think, rank for rank, the ladies dress here more expensively than elsewhere in India. I was taking a walk down Chowringhee this morning; it was a beautifully brisk and keen morning, such as detractors in the mofussil pretend that Calcutta never have, and I was surprised at the unnecessarily handsome toilettes, not only of the ladies who were driving, but of those who were walking; and these ladies were certainly not all of the local aristocracy.

LAHOR, Dec. 27.—A young Mahratta chief, Jaya Singh Rao Ghatga, has been paying Lahor a visit on his way to Peshawur. He is travelling about India to enlarge his mind, making the grand tour, in fact, accompanied by his tutor, a Mahratta Brahmin. He is chief of Kagal, a dependency of the native State of Kolapur; and he is first cousin on the mother's side to the Rajah of Kolapur, who died at Florence. The young chief had a private audience of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor at Lahor. He speaks English, and avows himself fond of cricket and driving four-in-hand. Bravo Kagal! The earthquake, of which I gave you information in my last letter, seems to have been felt all over the province; and at Murdan and Nowshera, I am sorry to say, considerable damage has been done. Throughout the Peshawur district it is said to have been the severest shock within living memory; and although the station at Peshawur has suffered very little damage, the double-storeyed barracks and a few private houses being slightly injured, and all the civil buildings having escaped, Murdan has suffered heavily. The four officers' quarters in the fort are uninhabitable; the walls thoroughly shaken and full of dangerous cracks, necessitating entire reconstruction. The outer walls of the fort itself have been severely shaken, two ranges of barracks are unsafe, and the remaining three greatly injured. The officers' mess house, session house, telegraph office, and part of the police office, are uninhabitable, and will have to be rebuilt. The tehsil, sarai, and jail have escaped. The earthquake was preceded by a loud rumbling noise, as described by one who was upon the spot, like the passage of a battery of artillery, and the terror caused was very great. One lady, the wife of an officer in the Guides, had a narrow escape of being crushed under her verandah, which fell in with a crash. As far as I can learn, only three natives were killed by the falling of outhouses. At Nowshera the barracks have been severely shaken, and several bad cracks are apparent; but they are not considered to be unsafe, and no other buildings have been injured. At Kohat little or no injury has been done.—Pioneer Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

DEATH OF MR. R. BRUCE.—We are sorry to learn that Mr. R. Bruce, sub-engineer, in charge of the head works of the Ganges Canal, a man who was highly esteemed in his department, shot himself last Saturday evening. No explanation of his conduct seems forthcoming. "Great sympathy," says the correspondent who sends us this news, "is felt for his family," so it would appear that the unfortunate man leaves other sufferers behind him.—Pioneer, Jan. 8.

TELEGRAPHS.—Certain changes in the cost of telegraphic messages to Europe will come into force from the beginning of the new year. As we understand them, they will render a very heavy and inconvenient tariff, somewhat more so than it was before. The rate is to be Rs. 2-8 a word, without reference to the "ten words limit." Any number of words may be sent; but until the names and addresses of sender and addressee are allowed to go free, as on inland messages, this concession is of no use. It would be a very brief message indeed that could be condensed, addresses and all, into less than ten words. By the old rate ten words could be sent for Rs. 20; now they will cost Rs. 25. These prohibitive charges seem to us bad policy, besides being wrong in principle; but in the telegraphic world it is a far cry to the reform which made Rowland Hill famous and the British Post-office profitable.—Pioneer.

LORD NORTHBROOK'S RETIREMENT.—The Pioneer gives, in the official form peculiar to that journal, the following reasons for the resignation of Lord Northbrook. After disposing of the reasons which will generally be assigned for the step, the Allahabad paper says:—"Nor does he resign upon public grounds at all. Sufficient explanation of the step may be found in the reflection that a wealthy peer with an assured political career at home before him must soon reach that point at which the grandeur of any position in India fails to compensate him for its responsibilities and toils. To this we may add that the rumours of Lord Northbrook's intention to resign, so frequently indulged in by a portion of the English press, had no foundation in fact, and are mere coincidences taken in connection with the event, for his Excellency's plans are only of recent formation, and were as much a surprise to the Secretary of State for India as to our readers."

THE TAJ MAHAL.—The Prince should have postponed his visit for another year if he wished to see the Taj completely restored and entirely free from the hideous scaffolding which still hides a part of its front. Very much, however, has been done: all the marble facing has been cleaned, and broken pieces replaced or repaired; the precious stones which were missing from the inlaid work have been supplied; and it only needs a few months to finish what has been so well commenced and carried on. The works at the Taj aim at complete restoration, and differ in this respect from the kutcha-pucka repairs in progress at the Fort. The Taj gardens are receiving all the attention possible, and the supplies of flowers doled out to the residents of Agra have been gradually but largely diminished, in order to secure as grand a display as possible on the Prince's visit. The roses have received special instructions not to bloom prematurely.

THE NAGA ATTACK ON CAPTAIN BUTLER'S PARTY.—Early on Christmas-day Captain Butler and the survey party marched from

Digitized by Google

Lakhuti. Their way at first was along the descent to a small river, which they crossed, and then marched upwards on the road to Pangti, a village where they meant to encamp that same night. Before the expedition started from Lakhuti, the men there had warned them against the possible outbreak of hostilities; and their warning turned out to be too well founded. About a mile from the river, the narrow path crossed over some deep ravines, and wound like a snake through the tall grass. On a sudden the guide from Lakhuti ran off; and then the war cries from the jungle all round showed that it was alive with hostile Nagas. So thick, though, was the jungle, that the enemy, hardly five yards from the path, were invisible. Then came a shower of spears, stones, and so forth; answered by the Sepoys most emphatically, for groans were heard from the different parts of the jungle. Captain Butler, it seems, had gone back some little time before the first alarm to give orders about crossing the coolies over a suspicious-looking ravine. All at once a Naga started into the path; and before a rifle could be raised, he hurled a spear at Captain Butler that struck him just below the collar-bone, and pierced his right breast. The wound was attended to by the native doctor, and he was carried gently back some little way to an open place, where the camp was formed, for it was too late to follow up the Nagas then. When our correspondent wrote, the 27th December, Captain Butler was getting on well, and the wound was thought to be not quite so serious as it looked at first. The day before, Colonel Tulloch, with a small force, attacked and destroyed Pangti. The whole party were to stay at the camp, which is about two miles off the village, till Captain Butler is well enough to move. —Pioneer.

MYSOR.—A scarcity of grain is said to threaten the province of Mysor. It is alleged that raggy, which was sold during good seasons at 30 and 40 seers for the rupee, has now fallen as low as 15 seers; and rice, which was sold at 15 and 16 seers, has come down to 9.

DR. JAGOR.—We learn that Dr. Jagor, the German Savan, who was out here a few months ago engaged in making a collection of objects of ethnographical interest for that department of the great Sanscrit College at Berlin, is now on the Nilghiris culling similar treasures there, and intends paying Madras another visit. We wish the learned gentleman every success, and hope he will succeed in taking back with him specimens of great interest, and likely to facilitate the studies of Sanscrit scholars from all parts of the world.

ACCIDENT TO THE NIZAM.—A Bombay paper hears from Haidarabad that the young Nizam when on the way to a country-house near Haidarabad, on the 21st Dec., met with a carriage accident, which might have been serious, though happily it was attended with no injury to life or limb. He had started through the city of Haidarabad on this the second drive he has taken since his convalescence, accompanied by his tutor, Captain Clark, and two nobles of the city, when one of the leaders shied and stumbled in a crowded street, throwing the leading postillion. Both the leaders, thus being freed from control, bolted along the street, the postillion of the wheelers meantime doing all he could to keep the carriage free from obstacles. Eventually, as the best chance of checking the leaders, which were dragging the whole equipage after them, the wheelers' postillion purposely and with great presence of mind jammed the team upon a corner of the road, thus bringing the carriage to a standstill for an instant, which was at once taken advantage of by Captain Clark to lift his Highness out of the vehicle.

CHOLERA AT SIKANDRABAD.—A Sikandrabad correspondent of the Madras Times, writing on the 3rd inst., says:—Cholera has been hovering about this station since the end of October last. It is nearly always present in the neighbouring city of Hyderabad, and the disease occasionally finds its way up here. The large bazaar at Sikandrabad is also frequently the haunt of the dread epidemic. It has attacked sundry other minor bazaars—as, for instance, that at Bowenpillay, where the 1st Madras Cavalry have their lines—but as yet it has spared the European troops. Rather, I ought to qualify this last assertion, as two men of the 44th Regiment, newly arrived from Kampti, are said to have been attacked, though both recovered. The followers of one of the batteries of Artillery quartered at Trimulgherry have been under canvas—outside the limits of the cantonment—for now about ten days on account of an outbreak of cholera among them. They are believed to have contracted the disease at Bolaram, when the battery was engaged at its annual gun practice a short time ago.

THE GOVERNOR OF MADRAS.—That our new Governor means business is evidenced by the fact that he has already determined on making a tour in the mofussil, and the fact may, of course, be regarded as a good sign. The Kistna and Godavery districts are to have the honour of this first visit, and His Grace embarks on his tour to-morrow in the steamer Sootra. The object of this tour is understood to be to inspect the irrigation works of those districts which the Duke of Buckingham is desirous of personally examining, and the tour is expected to last nearly a fortnight, his Grace returning to the Presidency on the 20th instant. The Governor will be accompanied on this tour by two of the ladies of his family, and attended by the Chief Secretary to Government and the Master Attendant, and three members of his personal staff. In connection with our new Governor, we may mention that a report has found currency to the effect that his Grace's notions of the relations between himself and his Executive Council are such that, if his Grace really entertains and adheres to them those relations are not likely to continue most cordial. His Grace, it appears, is inclined to regard the Council as a consultative rather than an executive body.—Madras Times, Jan. 8.

GUN PRACTICE AT TONGHOO.—Our Tonghoo correspondent writes under date 12th December as follows:—On the 10th December, the officers of the Royal Artillery invited the Station to a picnic on the occasion of their using their new practice ground for the first time, and all who could attend did so. The ladies were provided with elephants for the journey, and the men, who had to find their own way, rode. After fording the Kaboung Creek, the bridge over which came to grief during last floods and has not as yet been mended, circumventing two other bridges much too rickety and broken down to be safely ridden over, and proceeding along the road, abominable in many other respects, for four miles and more, we arrived at the ground. Here tents were pitched in a tope, both for the gunners and guests. During chota haziri the guns were put into position and all arrangements made for the firing. The Battery elephants were then brought up and conveyed us to the first distance, 800 yards. First the little 7-pounder mountain guns fired common shell, and very good practice was made, one shell carrying away the whole of the centre of the target. After that we had rocket firing at 900 and 1,000 yards; they did not seem to be very certain missiles to use; some burst close to the tubes, others going clean out of sight; however, two hits were made, and I believe this was considered very fair practice. I had almost forgotten to mention that a Burman who was crossing in front of the target had a shell pass within five feet of his head. After this we had a first rate cold tiffin, and returned to Tonghoo, much pleased with what we had seen. The artillery, what with packing up, did not get back to barracks till 5.30 P.M. The road mentioned above as being in such a discreditable condition is the Rangoon High-road.

THE MADRAS HAWKER.—If you do not happen to be busy, and some one of the articles he enumerates happens to be one you are in want of, he will supply you instanter. Down he squats, with his bundle in front of him. "Shirt buttons, did you say?" Oh, yes, he has fieen shirt buttins; but only look at this beautiful battis, or that nieece honey soap, or that new-fashin pair of stays!" If you don't want any of these he has got fieen o-dick-lon, tooth powder and brushes of sorts, Day and Martin's blacking, pens ink and paper, and a lot of miscellaneous articles which it would cost us a column of small type to enumerate. Buttins! Oh, yes, he has got some buttins, lots of fieen buttins; oh, here they are, silik buttins, braid buttins, fieen dress buttins, weskit buttins, thread buttins, brass buttins—anything but shirt buttons; those have, by some mysterious means, gravitated to the very bottom of his pack, and not till he has in vain tried to tempt you with each several item in his eternal repertoire will he produce those confounded buttons. There lie the whole contents of his pack before you. Ten to one, when he does manage to find the buttons, they are not the kind you want, but he insists that they are very gud; the very thing for your purpose; he knows a heap better than you what it is you want; but now, "wont you buy that fieen tooth-brush or comb, or bottle of Rimmell's lavender-water or piece of yem yaitch longcloth, or Cashmere, or battis, or one of those rolls of pretty ribbons? Well, the latter item entices you; you will look at the ribbon. How much a yard? How many yards misses want it? Only two yards?"—and he looks reproachfully at you. Has he not been at the trouble to spread the contents of his pack all over your floor, and now do you only want to buy two yards of ribbon? He hesitates about selling you so small a piece;—"he will sell you the roll for so much" (about three times its value), and you have to make a rule of three sum of it to arrive at the cost of the two yards. "Won't you take a dozen yards, at least? Well, then, half a dozen? Well, three, then?" And when you have got your two yards he will pester you, for another hour or so, with the merits of every article in his pack, and tell you how many yards of this he sold to Mrs. Col. So-and-so, on such a day, and at how much a yard, or how many tooth brushes Mrs. Captain Thingummy bought, and what she paid him for them, or that she has not paid him at all yet: "here is her chit, will missis please read it, and see if its all right, for he doesn't know to read Englees."—Madras Athenæum.

ANOTHER REVOLUTION AT MUSCAT.

MUSCAT, Dec. 24.—The Muscatites have to thank the restless and noli me tangere disposition, peculiar to Arabs, for a succession of exciting scenes which, when continued for a brief time, tend to amuse and relieve the tædium vitæ of the more docile spirits in those whose trade is not war. The agitation caused by Sayud Salem's recent and abortive attempt to reach Muscat has hardly subsided ere Sayud Tourkey is seized with the idea that his retirement at Gwadur has been of sufficient duration to satisfy both himself and his enemies, and, his health being quite restored, embarks in a buglah by which he voyages to Mutrah, reaching that town on the night of December 13, taking six days over his sea trip of 190 miles. The town and forts of Mutrah surrendered immediately his arrival became known, but the Sayud was doomed to experience a very different mode of reception at the hands of the Muscat garrison. Sayud Abdool Azeez was absent at Esmaillie, a place about sixty-five miles in the interior, and as he had given no particular instructions regarding the manner in which he desired Sayud Tourkey to be received should he turn up during his absence, the people in charge of the town and forts, being under the impression that such instructions were necessary before receiving with open arms his much-loved brother, shut the gates and determined to await their master's orders on the subject. Thus commenced a seven days' siege of Muscat! As the order to surrender did not come from Abdool Azeez, and the general impression inclining to the belief that he had no intention of sending one, Sayud Tourkey commenced gathering a force, principally from the Gafree tribes. On the other side, forts were provisioned and watered, the Bedouins being well supplied with ammunition commenced firing their matchlocks in the air, or nowhere in particular, accompanying their shots with hideous howls of defiance. This state of things lasted day and night for six days; on the seventh a truce was proclaimed, and the Muscat Chiefs went outside the town walls to parley with Sayud Tourkey regarding the intrinsic value of Maria Theresa dollars and Arab prowess in general, as compared with the bold defenders of the town and forts of Muscat in particular. This proved a more tedious matter than was anticipated; the jemadar in charge of Meranee Fort, having unfortunately lost his son during the siege, would not agree to the rate of exchange, although the defenders of the town had consented to open the gates in their charge. It was, however, arranged that the forts were to hold out for ten days, at the end of which time, should no contrary instructions arrive from Abdool Azeez, they were to be handed over to Sayud Tourkey. Firing was to cease until this period was up. His Highness, in consequence of these semi-satisfactory arrangements, entered the town and took up his quarters in the Palace amid shouts of welcome from the townspeople on all sides!

Sayud Tourkey, being extremely short-sighted and improvident in the management of his income, so long as it lasts, is much preferred by the people both of Muscat and Mutrah to his brother Sayud Abdool Azeez, who has the name of being very close as regards his dollars. Perhaps he is wise in this respect, as that element plays a very conspicuous part in all Arab politics, and he may be able to lay his money out to advantage before long, as we can scarcely expect him to remain quietly in the fort at Esmaillie, and, indeed, we believe that Sayud Tourkey has despatched men to endeavour to bring his brother a prisoner to Muscat.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

MILITARY.—Major-General Forbes, C.B., left Bombay for Ahmadabad by the mail train on Wednesday, Jan. 5, to take over command of the Northern Division of the Army on Thursday from Sir E. L. Russell.

THE GOVERNOR'S TOUR.—Sir Philip Wodehouse, the Governor of Bombay, promises himself a cold-weather trip, which is to commence, as at present arranged, about the 13th January. His Excellency will proceed by steamer to the harbour of Deogarh, about twenty miles south of Viziadrug, in the Southern Konkan. Thence the party will climb the Ghats into the territory of his Highness the Raja of Kolapur—a long projected highway, connecting that part of the Dekkan with the sea, which has been recently completed. Sir Philip Wodehouse, after paying a visit to the now flourishing Mahratta State above the Ghat, is to go on a tour through the South Mahratta Country generally, though it is understood that his Excellency's countenance will be given mainly to the British districts of that ill-defined province. The officers and people of these South-Collectorates are apt to feel that they are out of mind as well as out of sight of the great men at Puna and Bombay, who hold the secular welfare and official fate of their outlying subjects at the point of their quills. If we remember aright, there has been no gubernatorial inspection of the South Mahratta Country since some remote period in Sir Bartle Frere's reign.—Englishman, Jan. 7.

SIR FREDERICK HAINES'S FAREWELL TO THE MADRAS ARMY.

Head-quarters, Madras, Dec. 24.—In bidding farewell to an Army with which he has been so long and intimately associated, the Commander-in-Chief finds it difficult to express to all its members, in a General Order, what he would from his heart say to each of them.

II. Upwards of thirty-six years ago his Excellency had the honour of commencing his service in the Madras Presidency, and of making the acquaintance and, he believes, the friendship, of many of the distinguished officers who since then have brought honour and renown to this Army, and who, he is happy to say, are still regarded, by all officers now serving, as their models of loyal and chivalrous soldiers.

III. Were his Excellency to thank in detail, as he would like to do, all those who with much devotion and ability have aided him in the various duties he has had to perform during his tenure of the high command of this Army, he would, he is proud to say, have almost to enumerate the names in the Army List, so truly have his efforts to promote their welfare and that of those under them been met with a hearty disposition to do their best to maintain the efficiency, discipline, and long well-earned renown of this Army.

IV. He can, then, but hope that all the staff, general, divisional, and personal, all departments, and all commanding officers, will accept his cordial and sincere thanks for the loyal assistance they have rendered him in his execution of the office of their Commander-in-Chief. He thanks the non-commissioned officers and men for the good conduct and excellent discipline manifest in their corps, and now, in saying farewell to all, Sir Frederick Haines trusts that the Madras Army will believe that nothing has he more at heart, for nothing is he more solicitous, than their prosperity, honour, and ever-increasing fame.

INDIAN APPEALS.—SRI VIRADHI PRATAPA DEO v. SRI BROZO KISHORO PATTA DEO.—This appeal before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council from Madras, after occupying the committee for nine days, was concluded on the argument by the reply of Mr. J. B. Norton (with him Mr. Benjamin, Q.C.) for the appellant. Their lordships have yet to deliver judgment, and desire time to consider for that purpose. The case relates to the succession to the Zemindary of Chinnakimidy, and, in addition to issues of fact, it raises important questions affecting the Hindoo law of adoption.

MILITARY.—The promotion of Captain Montagu Hall, 101st Fusiliers, to a majority, leaves but two captains out of the 108 who joined the nine new Line regiments in 1862 in the rank to which they were appointed on the amalgamation. The two officers referred to are Captain Stokes and Nicholson, both of the 108th Regiment. In the Cavalry there are four officers who obtained their troops on the amalgamation, viz., Captains Stapleton and Fairbrother, 19th Hussars, and Wake and Smith, 21st Hussars.—The establishment of the 18th Hussars, on its arrival home from India, has been reduced from 545 of all ranks and 456 horses, to 534 of all ranks and 320 horses, one troop being at the same time added, the regiment being divided into eight instead of seven troops as hitherto.—Colonel the Hon. B. M. Ward is about to retire upon half-pay from command of the 32nd Light Infantry.—It is understood at Woolwich that the B Brigade Royal Horse Artillery will proceed to India with the reliefs next winter.

LECTURE ON "OUR EMPIRE IN INDIA."—Sir Henry Havelock, M.P., recently addressed his constituents at Sunderland. His subject was "Our Empire in India" Speaking of the financial expenditure, Sir Henry said its worst feature was the tremendous military expenditure occasioned by the reorganisation of the army after the Mutiny, on an entirely fatal principle as regarded the European officers. The native portion had been improved decidedly, but what was called the Expedient Staff Corps has been a gigantic and costly failure. It was not too much to say that it had produced an army far less efficient and far more costly than any other in the world, and must necessarily break down on the first pressure of actual war. The idea of only having six officers to a regiment and no reserve was so absurd that it was inconceivable how such an idea could have entered into the mind of any one who knew anything about war. German regiments lost from forty to forty-five officers in one action; and under modern rifle fire our Indian regiments would be deprived of their officers in half-an-hour, and become a hopeless, helpless, disorganised rabble.

DEATH OF MAJOR-GENERAL MARGARY, R.E.—This gentleman died at Weston-super-Mare on Jan. 21. He never recovered the shock of his son's violent death recently in China. Shortly after he received the terrible news he was seized with a paralytic stroke; this was in a few months succeeded by another, and this again by a third, which has terminated fatally. Henry Joshua Margary was born in 1811, entered the Hon. East India Company's College, Addiscombe, in 1827, and in 1830 obtained a commission in the Bombay Engineers, having passed out of the College at the head of the list of candidates, and having received the good-conduct sword. The Indian Army List, 1856, under War Services, has the following:—Major H. J. Margary served in the Mahratta campaign in 1844, was commanding engineer at the siege of Samnughur, and first mounted the breach at the storming of the fort; was field engineer of the Scinde reserve force during the war in Afghanistan, and received the thanks of the Governor-General in Council for his services; was at the capture of Boodurghur, and was the only engineer officer under fire there from daylight until 2 P.M., with sixty men from the 3rd, 16th, 20th, and 23rd Madras Regiments, under Lieutenants Mardel and Augustus Layard. On his first joining his corps in India the deceased officer was for seven years under canvas, during which time he was often struck down by fever. He retired from the army in 1863 with the rank of major-general, after thirty-three years' service.

THE NEW BISHOPS FOR INDIA.—A meeting of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel was held on Jan. 21 at the Society's rooms, to consider the letter of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the substance of which has been already published, respecting the proposed appointment of Drs. Sargeant and Caldwell to act as bishops under the Bishop of Madras in his diocese. The Bishop of London presided, and was supported by the Bishops of Lichfield and Melbourne, Bishops Claughton and Staley, the Archdeacon of Middlesex, Colonel Makins, M.P., Canon Gregory, the Master of the Charterhouse, and a large number of clergy and laity. At this meeting there was an animated discussion, mainly turning on the point of the ministrations of the new bishops towards Europeans, some members desiring to restrict their work as far as possible to the natives; but on the Bishop of Lichfield pointing out how in New Zealand, though a stipendiary of the Church Missionary Society, he had ministered to all races, a motion was carried, moved by the Rev. W. D. Maclagan (who spoke strongly as to the necessity of de-Europeanising the Indian Church, so that it might be an Indian and not a European one), seconded by his lordship, that the views of the society should be conveyed to the archbishop and the Indian bishops, that the society's chief object was to see a more effective episcopal superintendence of the native Christians. A resolution, pledging the society to find £600 for Dr. Caldwell's stipend, was carried, an amendment moved by the Rev. R. T. West for making it conditional being negatived. The general feeling was that, though the plan proposed was not the best, it was the best that could be obtained; and Bishop Selwyn expressed a hope that ere long by synodical action the Church in India would solve all questions of jurisdiction.

COTTON.—The quantity of Cotton shipped from the Port of Bombay to Foreign External Ports and Foreign Indian Ports during the month of November, 1875, amounted to 24,790 bales, or 96,71,892lbs., or 12,336, 117,196 candies, equal in value to Rs. 20,92,917.

INCIDENTS OF THE SIEGE OF ARRAH.—On the 27th of July the bulk of the Dinapore mutineers, after doing, on the way, as much damage as they could to all that belonged to the white men, poured into Arrah, and did according to the authorised Sepoy programme—they plundered the Treasury and released the prisoners in the gaol. Having thus recruited themselves with the sinews of war and the rough material of murder, they made for Boyle's little fortress, the inmates of which seemed to them like so many rats in a cage. But marching up with a bold front, and maintaining a smart fie, as they advanced, they met with such a welcome from the British garrison as to check their confidence for a while, and to make them think that it would suit them better to fight behind walls or trees. As the foremost men fell beneath the fire of our rifles or muskets from the loop-holed walls or from the well-sheltered roof of the small house, the military order in which the insurgents had advanced was broken up, and they dissolved into scattered groups, looking lovingly towards the big house or the trees which studded the compound. And soon they had disposed themselves in this safer manner, eschewing the open, and taking up their head quarters in or about Boyle's house. But it happened that the smaller house had a command of fire over the larger, and whenever one of the mutineers exposed himself for a moment, it was fortunate for him if a bullet, from behind the sandbags on the roof, did not put an end to his temerity. It has been shown that there was not an English military officer in the garrison; but never was a most unequal defence more gallantly or more skilfully conducted. Herwald Wake, the magistrate, took command of the Sikhs, and they had confidence in their leader, as he now had confidence in them. And yet their fidelity was sorely tried. Since the annexation of the Punjab to our British-Indian Empire, there had been a considerable enlistment of Sikhs into many of our Sepoy battalions, and in the Dinapore regiments were some who had cast in their lot with the Hindostanees. These men were now used as decoys. They called upon their comrades to join them; they offered large sums of money—readily payable from the spoil of the Treasury—to each Sikh soldier who would desert the English; but the answer returned went from the muzzle of our rifles and carbines, and was more eloquent than the best of words. This hope having now departed from the besiegers, they bethought themselves of new devices. Our little fortress with its seventy fighting men might be treated like a wasp's nest: the garrison might be smoked into torpor and death. So under cover of the night our assailants brought together a large quantity of combustibles, such as straw, and faggots, and bamboos, and heaped them up under our walls. Next morning these inflammable materials were ignited, and on the burning pile were thrown all the chillies—the raw material of cayenne pepper—that could be culled from the gardens of Arrah, where they were growing abundantly in aid of the savoury dishes of both races. The pungency of the smoke so raised was distressing to the besieged, and in time they might have been suffocated by it; but, not for the first time in our national history, a providential wind arose and frustrated the knavish tricks of our opponents. The peppery smoke was swept away before it had grievously affected our garrison; and the only tangible result of the attempt was that the remains of an adventurous insurgent, who had been active in the creation of the bonfire that was to have smoked our garrison to death, were found charred and calcined amidst its ashes. A bullet from our little fortress had penetrated the pile and killed the stoker in the midst of his work. Another device was tried. It was not a dainty one. The Sepoys may have heard of the use of stink-pots. But it was not easy to make them; and they thought that they could produce the same results in a simpler manner. The horses of Herwald Wake and Vicars Boyle and others were at he mercy of the enemy, if their masters were not; and it occurred to the Sepoys that the English warriors might be subdued by their own steeds. So they shot the Arabs where they stood, hastily picketed, and left their carcasses to rot under the walls of our fortress. It was calculated that the delicate sensibilities of the Sahib-logue could not hold out against the effluvium of the putrefying horseflesh, supplemented by a few corpses of Sepoys, who might more materially aid the siege in death than in life. It was, in deed, a very heavy trial of their powers of endurance. Unfortunately, those useful scavengers, the vultures and the jackals, who would soon have left only bleached skeletons, as studies of comparative anatomy for Dr. Hally, one of the garrison, were scared away by the incessant firing from our rifles and carbines and fowling pieces, and compelled to glut themselves on such carrion as they could find at a distance. But again a favouring breeze sprung up, and swept the foul stench away from the defenders. And they fought on none the worse for any of these devices.—Kaye's Sepoy War, Vol. III.

A Piano on which any person, although unacquainted with Music, can perform the most difficult and elaborate Compositions with faultless execution and delicacy.

The Piano-Mécanique is actuated by means of planchettes (small boards), into which is pinned the Composition to be performed; and these planchettes are caused to travel on a metal plate which is fitted on the top of the Instrument. This metal plate is pierced in a straight line across its breadth by a series of small openings, up through which project the steel ends of the keys of a miniature keyboard, chromatically arranged. The pins of the planchette, coming in contact with the miniature keyboard, act on the keys in a similar manner as would the fingers of the hand.

The metal pins of the planchette vary in height according to the marks of expression, accent, etc., indicated by the composer, the highest producing the full force of blow from the hammer, and the lowest the most delicate. It will thus be seen that every conceit of the author can be copied, and afterwards mechanically rendered in all its integrity; in fact, execution quite beyond the manual dexterity of the most accomplished performer is, by this system, ensured.

The Piano-Mécanique, when compared with kindred Instruments, presents at once its advantages; notably:—Compositions can be played in their entirety, there being no necessity for mutilation to meet the capacities of the Instrument, nor curtailment to suit the circumference of a barrel; greater facility for selecting the Music to be performed, and its requiring much less space; its faultless execution and complete means of expression; the facility with which any single Composition may be obtained for it, and at small cost; its freedom from derangement, either by excessive use or from the extremes of climate; the advantage of a Seven-Octave Manual for ordinary use.

In proof of the success of the Piano-Mécanique, it may be stated that upwards of 3,000 Compositions, ranging from the simple Ballad or Dance to the difficult Fantasia, Overture, or Grand Symphony, have been arranged for it, and to these, additions are almost daily being made.

A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit) forwarded by post on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the Manufacturer,

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CHLORODYNE is admitted by the Profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered
CHLORODYNE is the best remedy known for Coughs, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma.
CHLORODYNE effectually checks and arrests those too often fatal diseases—Diphtheria, Fever, Croup, Ague.
CHLORODYNE acts like a charm in Diarrhœa, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery.
CHLORODYNE effectually cuts short all attacks of Epilepsy, Hysteria, Palpitation, and Spasms.
CHLORODYNE is the only palliative in Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Cancer, Toothache, Meningitis, &c.

Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty's Consul at Manilla, to the effect that Cholera has been raging fearfully, and that the ONLY remedy of any service was CHLORODYNE.—See Lancet, 1st Dec., 1864.

CAUTION.—BEWARE OF PIRACY AND IMITATIONS.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was, undoubtedly, the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, was deliberately untrue, which, he regretted to say, had been sworn to.—See Times, 13th July, 1864.

Sold in bottles at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each. None is genuine without the words, "Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE" on the Government Stamp. Overwhelming Medical Testimony accompanies each bottle.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, January 17; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, January 15; Calcutta, January 14.

THE papers received by this mail contain little of interest in the way of actual news. A telegram of January 16 from Delhi to Bombay confirms the statements already telegraphed home about the result of the sham fighting between Generals Hardinge and Sir C. Reid. At Azadpur on the 15th the defending force was so powerfully supported by Artillery that one division of the attacking force was declared entirely out of action. The remainder of General Hardinge's army then moved on Reid's entrenchments, but the position of the latter was so powerful that General Hardinge acknowledged his inability to carry the famous "ridge" where Reid and his Gurkhas covered themselves with special honour in 1857. In the afternoon of the 16th the Prince and his staff, under the guidance of Sir H. Norman, himself in those days acting for Chamberlain as adjutant-general, went over all the positions held by our troops before Delhi during the siege.

A STORY told by the correspondent of the Bombay Gazette throws, if true, a significant light on the kind of enthusiasm which greets the Prince of Wales in the course of his tour. It was said that if the capture of Delhi by the attacking force had been carried out according to the original programme, the natives of Delhi, mistrusting the intentions of Government, would have fled from the city.

THE rumour that Sir William Muir was going to retire with Lord Northbrook seems to have gained readier and wider credence than it deserved. Possibly it was engendered by the fear, we hope equally groundless, that Lord Northbrook's retirement will pave the way for the reimposition of that hateful income-tax which Sir W. Muir so earnestly deprecated and Lord Northbrook so promptly repealed.

MAHARAJAH HOLKAR, we are told, was making grand preparations for the reception of the Prince of Wales at Indor. A new darbar hall has been built, and no expense spared in embellishing and finishing it. Gigantic chandeliers and mirrors and elegant and luxurious furniture had been ordered during the recent visit to Calcutta. A good road was being constructed from the Lal Bagh to the hall. The festivities, of course, are to outshine, if possible, everything hitherto enjoyed by the Prince elsewhere.

A PLOT is said to have been lately discovered by the Amir of Kabul, implicating Yahyah Khan, father-in-law to Prince Yakub Mohammed, Ibrahim Khan, the present Hakim of Kabul, and one of the sons of the Amir himself. Its object was the digging of an underground passage to effect the escape of Sher Ali's prisoner, Yakub Khan. It is stated that Yahyah Khan was expelled from the city, two friends of Mohammed Ibrahim Khan were put to the sword, and the rest imprisoned.

AFTER the dispersion of the Camp of Exercise the Commander-in-Chief was to return to Calcutta for a final discussion of certain schemes for the improvement of the Native Army. As it is understood that Lord Northbrook and Sir Henry Norman are generally in accord with Lord Napier touching the recommendations to be forwarded home for the Secretary of State's sanction, we hope that these will escape any very rough usage at the hands of the India Office authorities.

WE learn that Mr. C. M. Rivaz, of the Punjab Civil Service, is appointed to succeed Mr. Lepel-Griffin as Superintendent of the Kapurthalla State. A good deal of dissatisfaction has been caused thereby, as Mr. Rivaz is only of ten years' service, most of which, according to the Pioneer, he has spent in the Secretariat, "the last place in which he could acquire the kind of training he now stands in need of." Our contemporary argues that the Government would have had no difficulty in picking out a thoroughly suitable man, "as the Kapurthalla appointment, yielding Rs. 2,000 a month, besides a charming residence and position, would have been eagerly accepted even by Deputy Commissioners of the 1st class."

A LITTLE scene which took place at Benares after the Prince had laid the first stone of the new hospital produced a very pleasant impression on the assembled company. Among the ladies present—according to the Pioneer correspondent—was one of more than ninety years of age, the widow of a general officer, who some thirty years ago had commanded the Benares Division. Since then the venerable lady, "now for more than twenty years a widow, has lived continuously in Benares, where her life, one long career of kind words and charitable deeds, has gained her the respectful love of all. Something of this had reached the ear of the Prince, and he expressed a desire to see her. She rose and, assisted by friends, moved forward to pay her respects; but the Prince forestalled her by himself meeting her more than half way. He pressed her hand kindly again and again, and whispered words in her ear which, whatever they were, sent away the dear old lady with her eyes brimful of tears of pride and pleasure."

ALTHOUGH the Oudh Educational Department has been eleven years at work the number of pupils attending its schools is only about 60,000, or one in every seventy of the population. If the officiating Chief Commissioner has spoken truly in his remarks on the annual report of the department, the Mohammedans of Oudh are much readier to send their children to school than the Hindus of that Province. From this it would seem that Islam is much less bigoted and more reasonable in Oudh than in most other parts of India. But the Director of Public Instruction is inclined to attribute the small numbers of the Hindu scholars to the poverty of the parents —an opinion in which he is supported by one of the most experienced native inspectors in Northern India. If he is right, the Report bears its own witness to the heaviness with which the land revenue demands press on the Oudh cultivators. Be that as it may, the last report shows a steady increase in the number of schools and scholars. In 1873 there were 1,268 Government schools, costing Rs. 2,53,166 a year; while the corresponding results for 1874-75 were 1,315 schools and Rs. 2,53,966; thus showing that forty-seven new schools were established at the cost of one. The number of pupils learning English in the Government schools of Oudh is nearly five thousand; but the English instruction appears to be of the most superficial sort.

ACCORDING to a telegram of January 27 from Khojand, a large force of insurgent Turkmans under Autobadshi having assembled at Andijan, which had been fortified by intrenchments, the Russian troops commanded by General Scobeleff and Colonel Möller Zakomelsky, in accordance with their previous warning, commenced bombarding the town on the 20th ult. Shells were sent into the place during the whole of the 20th and the following day, when it was taken by storm. The enemy fled with very heavy loss.

THE Prince of Wales, accompanied by a strong British escort, arrived at Gwalior in the afternoon of January 31. The Maharajah Sindia met his Royal Highness several miles from the city, and accompanied him to the old Palace, the route to which was lined by 14,000 of Sindia's picked troops. The Prince afterwards mounted an elephant wearing gold-embroidered velvet trappings, and, followed by a procession of elephants and Sindia's infantry, proceeded through the crowded bazaar to the new Phulbagh Palace, which is commanded by the British fortress of Morar. Gwalior was brilliantly illuminated that evening. The population, though not warmly demonstrative, displayed great curiosity to see the Prince on his entry. Thousands crowded the windows and housetops, and packed the beautifully picturesque bazaars. The Maharajah's hospitality towards the Prince and the gentlemen accompanying him is unbounded. On his way to Gwalior his Royal Highness lunched with the Rajah of Dholpur. At the review held by the Prince of Wales next day about 8,000 men of Sindia's forces of all arms were present, and made a good show. The march past was followed by an excellent sham fight, in which Sindia directed the operations himself, his Royal Highness and the officers of his suite acting informally as umpires. The object of the manœuvres was the capture of a village, and in the course of the proceedings several brilliant cavalry charges were executed. The Prince's party eulogised the cavalry and artillery, but were less pleasingly impressed by the advance of the infantry. In the afternoon his Royal Highness visited the fortress of Gwalior, and returned the visit paid him by Sindia.

THE banquet given at the Palace that night and the fireworks which followed were on a grand scale. Sindia entered at the end of the dinner, and cordially proposed and drank the health of the Queen and that of the Prince of Wales. He expressed how deeply he felt the honour of the Prince's visit. His Royal Highness replied in befitting terms, thanking Sindia for his magnificent reception, and saying that he should remember his visit to Gwalior as one of the pleasantest of his tour. He was proud to rank Sindia as a personal friend. There was a grand assembly of nobles when the Prince returned the visit of Sindia in the afternoon, and the latter spoke in open Darbar before them, referring warmly to the Royal visit. Many Sindias, he said, had gone before, but none had been so highly honoured as he. The ceremony was most impressive.

THE Prince left Gwalior at 10.30 on the 2nd and lunched with the Rajah of Dholpur. He acquainted Generals Probyn and Samuel Brown and Doctor Fayrer that the Queen had nominated them Knights, and Messrs. Glyn, Ellis, Bradford, and Henderson, Companions of the Star of India. The Prince arrived at the Agra Camp at 6.30 the same evening. In addition to the officers above named it is understood that Captain Baring, Colonel Earle, Mr. Melvill, Resident of Baroda, and Colonel Michael will receive the Companionship of the Star of India, as a mark of Royal approval in connection with the Prince's visit to India. Prince Louis of Battenberg received a severe but not serious injury from a fall while pigsticking on the 3rd February. Dr. Fayrer left the Camp to attend the Prince, who did not go out hunting.

THE Prince of Wales arrived at Jaipur on the evening of Feb. 4, and entered the city in grand Oriental state. The procession was formed at Sangarin, and entered at the Ajmir gate. Running footmen, outriders, and javelin-men, all in curious costumes, came first. These were followed by guns drawn by bullocks, elephants bearing banners, and a long array of native horsemen. Then came a number of men-at-arms, fencing with long swords, and dancing wildly in front of the Prince and the Maharajah of Jaipur, who were mounted on the same elephant and surrounded by torchbearers. The Royal suite, also on elephants, rajahs and nobles followed next; horse and foot soldiers bringing up the rear. Altogether the entry was magnificent. The town was amply decorated with Venetian masts and bunting. Dense crowds lined the streets and much enthusiasm prevailed.

ON Saturday last the Prince of Wales went out from Jaipur tiger-shooting from an elephant, and shot a large tiger. The carcase was brought with great ceremony to the palace in the evening, a large party of native Shikaris being present. There was afterwards a grand Darbar at the Maharajah's palace, followed by a banquet, at which the Prince presided. The Maharajah entered the hall after dinner, and proposed the health of the Queen and the Prince of Wales. His Royal Highness, in responding, dwelt upon the prosperity of Jaipur and the constant endeavours of the Maharajah to improve the condition of his subjects. He thanked the Maharajah for his hospitality, and also for giving him an opportunity of shooting his first tiger. The evening closed with an entertainment of jugglers, Nautch girls, and players on musical glasses. The town was brilliantly illuminated in honour of the Prince's visit.

ACCORDING to a Bombay telegram of February 1, Sadasheo Rao, nephew of the deposed Gaikwar, Malhar Rao, and a claimant to the throne, has been deported from Baroda for inciting to rebellion. Serious blood feuds are announced among the tribes on the Sind frontier, and the Times of India expresses apprehension of a general rising throughout Beluchistan. The Indian Government is reported to contemplate occupying Khelat, and deposing the Khan. If the Indian Government is really contemplating such a measure, matters must be looking serious in that direction. Perhaps it is only a report and nothing more.

THE gist of the amended Furlough Rules for the Indian Staff Corps and the Local and Medical Services, as published in another page, will be found in the following paragraphs:—

1. Officers included in Schedule A may receive, after five years' service in India or under the Government of India, one year's furlough, and an additional year for each subsequent five years' service. Furlough not taken at the time it becomes due is not lost, and can, subject to these rules, be taken later.

2. An officer may receive at any time any portion of the furlough to which he is entitled. But, except under Rule 8, he may not be absent from duty on any ground for more than three years consecutively; nor, on return from furlough, may he receive, except under Rule 6, any further portion of the furlough to which he is entitled until after the interval of two years.

THE concession of one year's furlough with pay after the first five years of Indian service is a timely improvement on the old limit of eight years qualifying for furlough. But these two years' furlough could be taken at once after eight years' service, whereas under the new rules it cannot be so taken till after ten years. Of late years, too, an officer could take his third year of furlough after fourteen years' actual service; now he can take it only after fifteen years. On the other hand, he will now be free to take three years at once after fifteen years in India, and after twenty years' service he can come home again for another year; that is, two years sooner than he could under the late rules. After every five years in India he can henceforth take a year's furlough without losing his appoinment or prolonging the term of service for his pension. Instead of serving three years after his return to India, before claiming any balance of the furlough due to him, he will henceforth have to serve only two years. These rules will not apply to those officers who enjoy the benefit of the Civil Leave Rules.

A CALCUTTA telegram states that the Duke of Buckingham is expected to visit the Viceroy very shortly.

A SPECIAL telegram to the Times from Agra says that Colonel Sir W. Merewether has been removed from Sind. It is also asserted that important changes are spoken of in the administration of the Frontier States and their external relations. There is evidently something wrong in the state of affairs across the Sind frontier, perhaps in connection with the Khan of Khelat and his unruly subjects. But what has Sir W. Merewether been doing to provoke his removal from his present post?

"THE Times of India Handbook of Hindustan," compiled by Mr. Aberigh-Mackay, of the Government College at Delhi, contains a great deal of varied and useful information closely packed into 225 pages. Within the space allowed him the compiler has been very successful in his attempt to "furnish a bird's-eye view of the natural, historical, and political characteristics of our Indian Empire." He has not only culled much interesting matter from many trustworthy sources, but in his notes he points out a great many books of reference which any one anxious for further information may consult for himself. The work in short is a small cyclopædia of Indian subjects, embracing even a very full and readable chapter on Indian sport. Here, for instance, the inquiring reader may learn in a couple of pages all he cares to know about the noble sport of "pig-sticking," its dangers and excitements, the best kind of horse for his work, and the different modes of handling the boar-spear in Bombay and Calcutta. The chapters on "British Administration," and the "Native States," are well put together, and more than 100 pages are devoted to describing the chief "places of interest" and the Sanitaria of British India. A small but good map completes the usefulness of this praiseworthy handbook. Another useful little compilation in its own way is "Maclean's Guide to Bombay." A pretty full and interesting sketch of the geography, history, and peoples of Western India is followed by an instructive section on "trade and industry." The remainder of the book deals chiefly with the city of Bombay and its surroundings, with detailed descriptions of all that is worth seeing. Two maps at the beginning and a directory at the end enhance the value of the little book as a guide to the busiest, perhaps the wealthiest, and altogether "the most Anglicised city in India."

THE new edition—the twenty-first—of "Bradshaw's Overland Guide and Handbook" includes, we see, a short account of the Suez Canal, a revised Gazetteer of Indian stations, a complete Census of India, a Glossary of Indian words, and the latest rules regarding appointments to the various Indian services. The enterprising publishers are clearly resolved to leave out nothing of any use to intending travellers, which can by any means be crammed into some 400 closely printed pages.

THE Journal of the National Indian Association continues to keep its readers acquainted month by month with whatever concerns the special objects of the Association. The January number, for instance, has an interesting account of Miss Carpenter's recent doings in Sind, where a branch of the Association has already been established by her "with very good prospects of success." The progress of the Sassoon Industrial and Reformatory Institution is briefly shown in another paper, from which we learn that, owing to the yearly increase in the number of new admissions, arrangements have been made to accommodate 150 instead of 125 boys. The mode of treating the boys let out "on probation" seems to have worked so well that the partial freedom given them is seldom abused. A review of Captain Trotter's short History of India is evidently the work of a fair and discerning critic.

THE two vacant seats in the Council of India have already by common report been assigned respectively to Colonel Sir Lewis Pelly and Major-General Sir Henry Norman. Seeing that the latter officer is to remain another year in the Viceroy's Council, it is not very likely that common report in his case will be justified by the event, unless indeed Sir Edwin Johnson should go out for a time to India in his stead. Sooner or later no doubt Sir H. Norman will take that place in the Indian Council which his past services have fairly earned. With regard to Sir L. Pelly the case is somewhat different. He is now at home after thirty-five years of varied and conspicuous service in the field of politics as well as war. In 1852, twelve years after his entrance into the Bombay Army, he became assistant to the Resident at Baroda, Sir James Outram. A little later he gained fresh experience of civil duties under Sir B. Frere, then Commissioner of Sind. After the Persian War of 1857, in which he played his part as Aide de-Camp to General Jacob, he returned to his civil duties, and in 1859 joined the Persian Mission at Teheran. Thence he travelled on special duty to Herat, Afghanistan, and Beluchistan. In 1861 he was Political Agent in Zanzibar, and next year, as Resident in the Persian Gulf, he entered on a yet wider career of usefulness among the various Arab States along the coast, enforcing everywhere peace and order for twelve years by a happy mixture of tact, firmness, and prompt daring. Rajputana and finally Baroda were the field of his latest services. At the age of fifty, with his native vigour unimpaired, Sir Lewis Pelly is just the kind of man whose experience and strength of character would make up in the Indian Council for the retirement of Sir George Clerk.

THE annuities from the Madras Medical Fund for January, 1876, have been allotted as follows:—Deputy-Surgeon-General W. H. S. Burn, a large annuity; Deputy-Surgeon-General H. Young, a large annuity; Deputy-Surgeon-General G. Mackay, M.D., a large annuity; Surgeon-Major E. Dixon, a small annuity.

IT is said that, in view of the unsettled state of political affairs in China, the Government have resolved to strengthen our squadron in Chinese waters. The likelihood of such a measure seems borne out by a telegram just received from Bombay, stating that H.M.'s ships Newcastle, Narcissus, Immortalité, and Topaze have been ordered to proceed to China immediately.

IN Mr. Abbott's report of the fighting with the Malay insurgents on November 7, when Innes fell, and our troops were repulsed, there is the following extract:—

> The inefficiency of the Sepoys may be partly attributable to want of discipline, and to no officer being acquainted with their language. For the police there is no excuse, particularly as Mr. Plunket did all that was possible to encourage them and the Sepoys, but without success.

As there seems to have been only one officer in command of forty-seven Sepoys and twenty-seven policemen, it is not hard to account for their misbehaviour. Would seventy-four raw English recruits under one officer who only spoke Russian or Hebrew have behaved much better in like circumstances?

AMONG recent deaths in this country we notice those of Lord Melville and Major-general Fullerton. The former may be better known to old Indians as Brigadier Henry Dundas, who commanded a Bombay column at the siege of Multan, the battle of Gujarat, and the pursuit of the Sikhs and Afghans in the Sikh Campaign of 1848-49. He afterwards commanded a division of the Indian Army for some years. The other deceased officer had not long returned home after thirty-five years of Indian service, including the Gwalior and Satlaj Campaigns, and much subsequent service in the Judge Advocate General's Department.

Read, of the 9th Royal Lancers, was arraigned on the following charge :—Charge.—Insubordination, at Sialkot, on or about the 13th of Oct., 1875, in the following instances, namely—1st—Having disobeyed the lawful command of his superior officer, Troop Sergeant Major H. Elvin, of the same regiment, by not remaining silent when ordered by him to do so, at the same time using towards the said Troop Sergeant Major H. Elvin, insubordinate language, in substance and to the effect following, that is to say, "I am not a dog." 2nd. Having disobeyed the lawful command of his superior officer, Sub Lieut. C. J. R. Hearsay, of the same regiment, by not remaining silent when repeatedly ordered by the said Sub Lieut. C. J. R. Hearsay to do so. 3rd. Having in the regimental orderly room, and after being awarded imprisonment with hard labour for one hundred and sixty-eight hours on account of the 1st and 2nd instances of this charge, by Lieut. col. H. Marshall, commanding the regiment, used towards the said Lieut. col. H. Marshall, his superior officer, insubordinate language, in substance and to the effect following, that is to say—"Thank you : I'll do it, too." Finding. The court found the prisoner guilty of the charge, and sentenced him to suffer penal servitude for the term of five years. The court further sentenced him to be discharged with ignominy from H.M.'s service. Approved and confirmed, NAPIER OF MAGDALA, General C.-in-C. in India. The ceremony of drumming out is dispensed with.

COURT-MARTIAL ON A NATIVE COMMISSIONED OFFICER.—At a Native General Court-Martial assembled at Mhow, on December 6, Subedar Kanojee Purub, 25th Regiment N.L.I., was arraigned on the following charges, important as being of a seditious character :—First Charge : Conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline and neglect of his duty as a commissioned officer, in having failed to bring to the notice of his commanding officer the receipt by him, at Mhow, during the months of April and May, 1875, or thereabouts, of one or more circular letters addressed to him in his capacity as Muccadum of the Mahrattas of his regiment, notwithstanding he had been especially warned to do so in an order published to the regiment on parade in the month of May, 1875. Second Charge : For conduct unbecoming an officer, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at Mhow, on or about the 13th day of September, 1875, wilfully made a false statement to his commanding officer, Lieut. col. Fairbrother, 25th regiment N.L.I., in that, when he was questioned at an investigation which was then being held, if he had since, or before, the 10th day of May, 1875, heard of or or seen the circular letter, or letters, referred to in the preceding charge, wilfully falsely stated in substance to the effect following : "I did not read it, but asked the man who brought it what it was ; he said, it was about a woman ; I told him to take it away, that I would not interfere in the matter ; the man took it away at once." He, Subedar Kanojee Purub, 25th Regiment N.L.I., well knowing such statement to be false. The Court found the prisoner "Not Guilty" of the first charge, but "Guilty" of the second charge. The Court, having found the prisoner, Subedar Kanojee Purub, guilty as above specified, there being no previous convictions, sentenced him to be placed at the bottom of the list of subedars of the 25th Regiment N.L.I. The Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army makes the subjoined remarks on the results of the above Native Court-Martial :—The finding on the first charge is disapproved and not confirmed. The finding on the second charge is confirmed. The sentence is disapproved and not confirmed, as I consider it inadequate to the circumstances of the charge of which the prisoner has been found guilty. The evidence adduced on this trial proves that, in a time of some public disquietude, and when it was known that secret emissaries were attempting by circular letters to the Mahrattas of this army to excite and inflame their caste prejudices, and in consequence of which, warning was given to the different regiments that, such being so, the receipt of all letters of this description was to be made known to their commanding officers, a circular Mahratta letter was received by the prisoner, who, afterwards, at a court of inquiry assembled to inquire into his conduct in this respect, positively denied that he had either read it or received it, although it is indubitably proved that he did both. Of this fact the Court have properly found him guilty, but have acquitted him of the first charge on the grounds that the letter was received before the warning was issued, and that the contents of it have not been proved to be seditious. But in my opinion, and I think this will be the opinion of all loyal officers of the native army, it was the prisoner's duty as a commissioned officer, having received an unusual circular letter, the contents of which were of an ambiguous nature, only a short time before the warning as to the receipts of such letters was given on parade, to have brought such fact to the notice of his commanding officer. Instead of taking this course, he, when questioned on the matter, denies receipt of it altogether. As to what the contents of the letter were, they can only be judged of from the reason which prompted the denial of its receipt, and the non-production of this document which is clearly traced to the prisoner's possession. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the Court have not risen to the gravity of the case, and not only improperly acquitted the prisoner of the first charge, but have also, under the circumstances I have detailed, awarded an inadequate punishment for the offence of which they have found him guilty. I do not consider that it is for the good of the service that a man who has shown such a want of loyalty should remain in its ranks, and I direct the summary dismissal of Subedar Kanojee Purub from the service.

COLONEL CORY ON OUR POSITION IN INDIA.

THE alarmist school of politicians, of whom Sir H. Rawlinson and Herr Vambéry are two leading types, have just gained a powerful ally in the eloquent author of "Shadows of Coming Events."* That Colonel Cory has carefully studied his subject every page of his well written and thoughtfully reasoned volume will show. If he still fails to convince us of Russia's wickedness and our own folly in underrating her strength and ignoring her evil purposes, it is our fault rather than his. It has certainly been our misfortune to read many works on both sides of the never-ending controversy about Russian progress in Central Asia and England's duty thereanent. On both sides there has been abundance of wild talk, of ill-founded assumption, of unreasonable conjecture. But if our optimism hardly goes the length of an ungrudging belief in Russian friendliness and love of peace, we yet fail to see any present reason for suspecting Russia of evil designs on India, and we strongly object to increasing the debt of India in order to forestall the advance of a Russian army at some distant period towards Herat. Colonel Cory may frighten whom he will with his attempts to prove the weakness of our Sind and Punjab frontier for defensive purposes; but it is comforting at least to know that all military critics are not of one mind on this matter. Against those who clamour for an immediate advance to Quettah and Kandahar may be set the opinions of such good soldiers as Lord Sandhurst and Sir Henry Durand. The former, as quoted in one of Wyllie's essays, held that, even if such an advance were not too costly to be made without urgent cause, the Bolán Pass could best be defended from the eastern or Indian side, where "a hostile force could be struck on the head before it could have time to deploy with the heavy materiel, without which a modern army cannot move, or hope to move, against such forces as we should array against it on any field we might choose between Shaikárpur and Dádar." Durand for his part urged with equal justice the impolicy of forestalling an uncertain future by a forward movement across our frontier. He was quite content, and so are we, with the strength of our position along the Indus, knowing that, with due precautions taken for its defence, we might at any moment mass our troops in any part of Afghanistan. Masterly inaction is still, for many reasons, financial as well as military and political, the only safe course open to the rulers of British India.

On some other questions discussed by Colonel Cory we are more inclined to follow his lead. We heartily agree with him in desiring the re-establishment of a local British army in India, as one special safeguard against possible danger, whether from within or without. Remembering the libels so often uttered against the old "Company's Europeans," we thank him for saying that "a more contented, a better behaved, and a more efficient body of soldiery than the Company's British troops never existed in any country." A local army for India would not only do away with the heavy cost of annual reliefs under the present system; it would also ensure India's safety from the danger of losing part of her British garrison, in the event of a sudden call for reinforcements elsewhere. Another grave evil pointed out by the author concerns the present mode of officering the Native Army. Thanks to the blunders committed in the process of amalgamating the two armies, "few men serve now but whose heartiest anticipations are for the close of their service; most of the older men are wearied, of the younger listless." They have no longer a definite and assured career before them, and they go through their duties with ill-concealed disrelish, with eyes continually turning homewards. It is useless to deny that "the young subalterns of British regiments, from among whom are drawn the officers of the present native army, enter the Indian Staff Corps in most instances with unconcealed regret, in many with avowed aversion." The old ties that held officers and men together have disappeared, and the evil results of the change have been aggravated by the absurdly small number of English officers now attached to a native regiment. The very soldiers who stand most in need of good leading are put off with the fewest officers, for the average Subadar or Jemadar counts for no more than he did in the days of the Company.

"Can we have no training"—asks Colonel Cory, "except by turning British regiments into preparatory schools for young gentlemen? Can the Imperial Government found no such college as Addiscombe in which to educate the Indian officers of the future? Will any plan give us better than those we have had, and whom we are now forcing out of employ?" Under the old system many an officer served from boyhood in his regiment, taking pride in its renown, and a warm interest in his men. Now we have a system by which "officers may be transferred from one regiment to another at the will of the Commander-in-Chief." Their promotion depends on nothing but length of service. "As a body they have no reciprocal interest in one another; probably they have never met until accident has brought them together for a time, the duration of which is uncertain." Sometimes the junior in ranks holds the higher position. "One regiment is commanded by a captain, another has field-officers as subalterns." As a rule, only four or five out of the seven nominally attached are ever present with the regiment, and these have to do the work which in a British regiment is distributed among thirty or more. To expect real efficiency from troops thus officered is to ask too much even of English energy and talent for command. Not only should the number of regimental officers be increased—unless a new class of native officers can be formed instead—but the present mode of feeding native regiments with officers trained in British regiments should certainly be replaced either by direct appointments or by young men who have passed through a special military college.

THE RUSSIAN PEASANTRY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Finally, an attempt may be anticipated to improve the condition of the peasantry, and induce this numerous part of the population to work more industriously than hitherto. This is a Herculean task. The difficulties to be overcome arise partly from the abject ignorance and sloth of the peasantry, and partly from institutions based upon these popular peculiarities and part and parcel of the national existence. When the peasant ceased to be the property of the State twenty years ago, he became the slave of his parish. He received no land of his own, but only a claim to a share in the village property. This village property, being divided and redivided from time to time, gives no one individual an interest in improving his temporary "lot." The peasant is also compelled to contribute an indefinite quota towards the parish taxes, the Government holding the village responsible as a whole, and leaving it to the local authorities to exact as much from the individual inhabitant as they please. The greater the deficit caused by idlers, the greater the strain on the industrious; the larger the number of deserters, the heavier the burden on those that remain; a system which ruins all alike by inflicting penalties upon the industrious.

These arrangements, it is true, existed also in the days of serfdom, but had not the same baneful effect as now. The late landlord and slaveowner being benefited by the prosperity of his peasants, took care to see land and taxes equally portioned out among them, whereas the present authorities, though the peasants have a voice in their election, are indifferent to the welfare of their constituents, and deal with them as caprice and corruption dictate. The result is the growth of idleness and drunkenness, the falling off of agriculture, and a famine in a Province or two year after year.—Letter on Russian Finance in the Times, January 17, 1876.

SIR,—It is interesting to compare the village communities in Russia with those in India. In Russia the system of joint responsibility is hated by the villagers; it has been forced on them by Government, which has fancied that by it debt can be recovered, taxes levied, and the conscription enforced.

In order to carry out this Communal system, Government has enacted laws in Russia which practically prohibit migration. I recommend your readers to study Mr. Mitchell's report of 1870, which sketches in a masterly manner the terrible evils and widespread misery caused by tying down the peasantry to the soil on which they were born.

In Northern Russia, where agriculture does not generally pay, there is excessive population and consequently very low wages. Mr. Mitchell has given a thrilling description of the condition of the women, who are terribly overworked with hard field labour, and of the infants, who die in multitudes. In the Provinces of Novgorod and Vologda infants have very little chance of living even for a few months; and those who survive and reach manhood are often unfit for hard work, owing to hernia, caused by infantile screams or to other diseases. The mothers of infants are unable to feed them or to leave their field labour frequently during the day. The curds and water (or gruel) left with the young infant sometimes choke it; the food, such as it is, is sometimes carried off by domestic animals during the mother's absence. I beg your readers to study pages 86 to 90 of the Blue-book for 1870, part 2.

All this misery and destruction of life might be avoided if the peasantry were permitted to migrate. If, instead of vain endeavours to grow corn in Northern Russia, or to exhaust the fertile black soil which stretches from Kiev to Kazan, the peasantry were permitted to migrate to the fertile plains of Southern Russia, where labour is comparatively scarce and wages high; or, if they were permitted to cultivate land in the Volga Provinces, where vast tracts of rich soil remain untilled; how happy would be their fate, how profitable to Government would be their labour, and how easy would be the conscription.

As long as immigration into Southern Russia from the North is prohibited, so long will the Russian farmers be unable to compete successfully in the London market with the free and enterprising settlers in the United States of America.

The condition of Rajpoot village communities is very different. The Indian Government, instead of prohibiting migration, directly encourages it. In 1853 the Hon. Mr. Thomason, Lieut.-governor of the N.W. Provinces, authorised me to offer a large tract of fertile land in the Goruckpoor district to a clan of Rajpoots settled in the neighbouring district of Azimgurh, who had increased in numbers to such an extent that their industry could not find sufficient employment. Natives of India in want of employment are permitted to go whithersoever they choose: to Assam, to Burmah, to Ceylon, to the Mauritius, to the West Indies. But the Rajpoot dislikes leaving his ancestral home for ever. He is willing to take service with Government or with native chiefs, and to leave his village for months, for years; but his eyes are ever cast backward on his beloved home; to that home he hopes some day to return, and do not his Aryan brethren, the English in India, do the same?

The evils of the communal system in Russia are caused by the Government, which prohibits migration. The present evils of the communal system in Rajpoot villages have been caused by our Government's disregarding ancient customs, which for hundreds of years have kept clans united. By declaring that it will not limit a landholder's power to alienate his land, and to admit strangers into the village, Government has destroyed the village unity, the communal system in which the clans delighted, and has let in a flood of discordant elements, which it now finds itself unable to control. (See page 5 of the new Blue-book.)

Had the protected Sikh and Rajpootana States adopted our mischievous theories of free land the present state of India would have given rise to very serious anxiety. As it is we must hope that Putiala and Jodhpoor may, in the event of a rebellion, assist us in restoring peace until the eyes of Englishmen can be opened to the necessity of reorganising the disunited clans, living or rather half starving in British territory, in the cause of order instead of in that of disorder. How, under present circumstances, can we hope that brave Kshutriya warriors, whose title to rich lands has been transferred to usurers, will fight heartily in defence of those usurers?

According to ancient Rajpoot customs, those of the village community who were industrious, enterprising, and successful, received over in mortgage the lands of their idle, extravagant, and unfortunate brethren. Individual property was thus carefully recognised and protected, while those who had lost their lands seldom lost hope, but were incited to seek service as mercenary soldiers, and in such service to save enough money to redeem the mortgage on their ancestral lands.

While the Russian hates joint responsibility the Rajpoot delights in it, provided that it is confined to the descendants of the original settlers in the village. In Belha Bans, Chiriakote, Azimgurh the Bais Rajpoots requested the Settlement Officer to fix in one lump the land tax for the whole Pergunah (County), instead of assessing each village and field; they requested permission to undertake the duty of distributing the burden of taxation among themselves. The history of this clan is very interesting, and is a fair example of the working of the Bhyacharuh or communal system among the Kshatriyas.—Your obedient servant,

T.

IRRIGATION IN THE BENGAL PRESIDENCY.—VI.

This brings us to the last branch of our subject—the consideration of whether the same object, perennity and high-class irrigation, cannot be more cheaply attained.

The man who should bring coals from Wales to Newcastle would be thought demented; if we go to the expense of bringing water from 200 miles' distance when an ample supply is passing our doors, it is surely an equal error of judgment. Yet this is what is now being done in the case of the Sirhind Canal at an estimated cost of £2,980,427. In either case we do but get water; in the latter there may be more silt in it; but it has been experimentally proved that, on properly designed canals taken direct from the river, silt clearance may be reduced to a very low percentage. In the former case, we have the loss by percolation and evaporation in bringing water from a distance, which is 23 per cent. in every hundred miles (Agra Canal estimate), or in 200 miles two-fifths (23 + 17 per cent.) of the discharge at the head.

But at the seventy-fifth parallel of longitude—west of which only, as before said, is irrigation of great importance to the Government or the people—a course of under twenty miles from the river affords sufficient head for flow irrigation. Evidently, therefore, in going up 200 miles for a head, we not only have the additional cost of so many extra miles in length of excavation, and of the greater sectional area necessary to carry the 40 per cent. of water which must be lost on the way, and of the greater depth and hardness of excavation in the high submontane tracts, but we have obtained a great head only to throw it away at an enormous expense in weirs. Part of the vast cost of the Bari Doab Canal has been owing to the attempt to lessen this important item of expenditure by giving the canal slopes which have been found by experience disproportionate to the power of resistance of the soils traversed. It has had in consequence to be remodelled, the idea of navigation thereon given up, and even now it cannot safely admit a head of water at all equal to its capacity, or adequate for the demands of the thirsty tract it is designed to water. However, as before mentioned, mistakes were unavoidable, works of this magnitude being without precedent, and the results of experience therefore not available. Another vast source of expenditure in carrying up canal heads to the Himalayas is the difficulty in dealing with the mountain torrents which the canal has to cross. For example, the aqueduct by which the Ganges Canal crosses the Solani river eighteen miles from its headworks is 920 feet long, in fifteen arches of fifty feet span each, and is connected on either side with an earthen embankment raised nearly thirty feet above the valley of the Solani, which it traverses for a length of about three miles. This is one only of four such torrents which are crossed in various methods by the Ganges Canal.

If the other method of obtaining permanency and perennity be considered, we find a vast outlay incurred to bring the water supply to the mouths of the canals instead of taking the mouths of the canals to the water supply. Great sums are laid out on a dam and head works which must, in a river traversing an alluvial tract, be always exposed to the risk of being, sooner or later, outflanked and left high and dry. We know from the experience of the railway bridges that, controlling works notwithstanding, rivers will gradually alter their course. The meanderings of the Punjab rivers have seamed the face of the country with vast deserted channels. No doubt engineering skill is equal to every triumph, and controlling the rivers is a mere matter of money; but this only brings us back to the argument of this paper, that perennity and permanency in canals may be sought at too high a cost. Certainly no such vast outlay as is anticipated for controlling works has been incurred in Madras, where this system is in extensive use; but then, as pointed out in "Indian Polity" (p. 609), "the conditions of the two cases are very different . . . the fall of the country there is extremely small; the régime of the river channels has been thoroughly established and the management of the water is easily under control. Moreover, the difference in level between the river and the country" (in the deltas of the rivers where, and not in their valleys and upper courses, these works have been undertaken) "through which it flows is so slight that a very moderate height of dam suffices to lift the water into the irrigating channels." On the other hand, the fall of the country where it is proposed to dam the Sutlej, in Colonel Anderson's scheme, before referred to, is some two feet in a mile, and the channel of that river has consequently no established régime, but changes from year to year. Again, the country to be commanded being high above the river, and the water required not the flood only (as in the case of the Madras works), but the low winter supply, the dam would have considerable height and become an obstacle which the river would make most violent efforts to outflank—such as no conceivable works that could be constructed, without swamping a canal by their cost, would be able permanantly to arrest.

The Jumna dam is a bagatelle to that proposed for the Sutlej, but a few statistics therefrom will be useful to illustrate the argument. The weir across the Jumna at the head of the Agra Canal rises ten feet above the winter level of the stream and thirteen feet above its bed, the object being to raise the water into the canal whose bed is six feet higher than that of the Jumna. The length of the weir is 2,428 feet (6 000 feet is the least probable length of one upon the Sutlej). It is "supported on the left bank by a wing wall on deep foundations and an embankment which is carried from thence up to the Delhi Railway bridge" (seven miles). "On the right bank the weir abuts on a spur of the rocky line of hills . . . The weir is thus perfectly secured on this right flank, and, moreover, the rock furnishes the material which has rendered it possible to form the weir in the way described" (Roorkee Engineering Papers). It is this material ready to hand (4,660 000 cubic feet of stone were used), and the protection of one flank free of cost, which reduces the estimate for this weir to £83,000, or about one eighth of the estimated cost of that across the Sutlej. The weir was commenced in December, 1869, and was completed to within a foot of its full height in time for the floods of 1871, during which and the following year a severe and costly struggle was maintained with the river. In 1871 the left bank protection works were destroyed for the first two miles above the weir, and the weir itself and its talus considerably damaged in both years. After the floods of 1872 the weir was completed to its full height, and "the floods of 1873 were very low, and did little damage to the weir." Of the years 1874 and 1875 the public has yet no account. To those who know the relative conditions of the Jumna at Delhi and the Sutlej at any point west of its junction with the Bias, the history of the weir near Delhi will be conclusive against any similar scheme for the latter river. For, if outflanked, what a calamity—apart from the vast pecuniary loss to Government—would be entailed upon the people whose cultivation depended upon the canals fed by that weir. The waste reclaimed thereby would revert to waste before the irrigation arrangements could be again put in gear, and the distress entailed would be such as it would take long to forget.

Why, then, have all engineers accepted these enormous expenses and enormous risks as a sine qua non in designing perennial and permanent canals?

1st. On the ground that no practical method was known of lowering canal heads, taken directly out of rivers flowing through alluvial tracts, sufficiently to ensure perennial flow.

2ndly. On the ground that no practical method was known of preventing or remedying the failure of canal heads, so taken, consequent on changes in the course of such rivers—i e, the desertion of the head by the river throwing up an intervening sandbank, or the choking of the head by the river eating away the bank above it and depositing the silt therein.

It has before been explained that, even supposing the above grounds to be good, the disadvantages referred to are far less grave than they are represented to be. Neither absolute perennity nor absolute certainty of supply are indispensable in working a system of canals with much profit both to the Government and the cultivator. The report of the engineer in charge of the Lower Sutlej and Chenab series for 1873-74 is one long wail; every canal is stated to have worked indifferently, to have suffered from short supply, &c.; the cultivation on the series fell one-fifth short of that of the previous year (a very good one). Nevertheless, the series irrigated 197,064 acres in that year, or one-sixth of the Bari Doab average for the same year, and returned 13·4 per cent. on its capital cost, or, according to the Government statistics, 105 per cent.! Moreover, an approximation to permanency and perennity is already attained without seeking permanent heads at the foot of the Himalayas or upon a costly weir. Desertion or choking of a head is met by the provision of supplementary heads, taken out of the river at points above and below the working head, and kept ready to open in case of its failure. It would be seldom, indeed, that two or three heads, miles apart, would all be disabled in the same year. That good alignment and deep digging will secure perennity, or an approximation thereto, is evidenced by the fact that, in the Bhawalpur State seven of the principal canals work throughout the cold weather, and are only closed, voluntarily, for a short period for clearance.

Even, however, were the disadvantages of canals taken directly out of the rivers, such as they are described, it could not still be expedient to seek to remedy them in a manner so commercially unprofitable as the erection of weirs on the rivers, or the prolongation of the heads to the Himalayas has been shown to be. But in point of fact the grounds on which it is supposed that permanency and perennity cannot be otherwise secured are not in themselves good. Both can be obtained by the application of mechanical power to excavation and clearance, which is, indeed, the manner in which it is intended to keep open the head of the Agra Canal, the gradient on which has been kept very low consequent on the experience of erosion on the older canals.

The science of dredging is yet in its youth, and dredgers have been hitherto mainly employed in harbours, estuaries, and tidal rivers, where ample depth of water has been available. They have, therefore, been designed to work over the obstacle to be removed, and dredgers of this description may be seen working efficiently in the Suez Canal, on the Grand Canal at Amsterdam, in the Kurrachi Harbour, and elsewhere. They dig up the bed beneath them, and either discharge the dredgings into barges which convey them away to sea, or (in canals) run them—with the aid of a stream of water—down long shoots on to the bank, or else dissolve them in water and discharge them on to the bank through pipes, by aid of a centrifugal pump.

Evidently this is a system requiring great modifications for successful application in arms of rivers, or in canals, liable to be shallowed by silting and by the fluctuations of the floods, which are often as much as three or four feet in a day. It would be necessary, for use in such channels, to combine sufficiently powerful, and consequently weighty machinery with very light draught. If the design of the dredger be such as to necessitate its riding astride of its work it must be able to work in very shallow water, but, if the machinery be made of small weight and power to permit of light draught the work done will be insufficient for the object of the dredger. Even when a satisfactory minimum of draught and maximum of power was obtained the dredger would be useless during the season that the canals and river arms are dry, or when their depth falls below that required for the said minimum draught; and she would have to desert her task some time before that period arrived, for fear of being caught by a sudden fall and left stranded till released by the next year's floods.

What is wanted, then, is a dredger to which existing depth of channel is no object; but which, starting from a depth in which she can float, will dig a channel for herself. Having found a method of applying mechanical power which will enable a dredger to do this, it only remains to determine the amount of power required and the best draught with which that power can be carried; and then, with that power, to sink the existing bed of the channel so much below the lowest possible fall of the river;—obtaining thereby a canal yielding a perennial supply of that minimum depth.

LORD NORTHBROOK'S RETIREMENT.

The Times of India deems it unnecessary to refer to the manner in which his Excellency has acquitted himself in the high office which he is thus prematurely about to vacate. But we may state with confidence that whatever differences of opinion there may be with respect to particular acts of the Viceregal Government during the last four years, there are few who will refuse to acknowledge that under Lord Northbrook the Empire has been administered with great honesty of purpose and with an unmistakable desire to advance the welfare of the population at large. For our part we consider it little less than a national calamity that India should be deprived of the guidance of his experienced and dispassionate mind at a moment when so many great questions require to be dealt with. The native army must be reorganised; the currency must be adapted to the altered circumstances of the time; and there are other matters awaiting settlement of hardly less moment. But we must now be content with the services which it has been his lot to render in the past, and they have been by no means inconsiderable. His financial policy was eminently successful; while abolishing the income-tax, it has been his fortune to render a yearly surplus one of the institutions of the country. His foreign policy was open to criticism, but one fact is to be recorded to his credit—he firmly resisted the clamour for annexation, either absolute or virtual, in the case of Baroda, and that, too, under circumstances in which a weaker man might easily have been led into making a very serious blunder. A great deal of money was doubtless spent in dealing with the famine in Bengal last year, but all India was impressed with the conviction that it was the determination of the Government that no province should ever again be depopulated by famine as was Orissa—that the lives of the people were more precious in its eyes than any amount of treasure. And it cannot be said that the money was wasted which produced that impression among the millions subject to our raj. But, as we have said, we are not called upon at this moment to pass judgment on a career not yet closed, though it is drawing rapidly to a close not wholly unexpected.

The Indian Daily News remarks that when Sir L. Mallet came out officially to inspect the concessions which a badgered Indian Department was willing to make to Manchester, many people foresaw that some kind of a crisis was at hand. It would be a mistake to say that the retirement of Lord Northbrook was foreseen: for it was not. But we do not think there is much exaggeration in saying that it was felt pretty strongly that some indefinite sort of slight was being put on the Viceroy—none the less disagreeable that it might have been wholly unintentional—and that something unpleasant might flow out of any serious conflict between the Viceroy and the commercial member of the Indian Council. It will generally be conceded that a Viceroy who stood being set right when he went wrong about the famine, is hardly the man to kick against the pricks of official correction, on a matter of mere commercial importance, unless something darker lies behind the style of the correction; and our chief reason for any grave apprehension may perhaps be detected in the wording of those recent rumours from England which have played off direct taxation in a rather cynical way against customs duties. Lord Northbrook is scarcely the kind of statesman from whom we should expect any serious sacrifice of conviction to official loyalty; but it is conceivable that there is some kind of decent compromise between his honest concern for the people of India and the concessions which Manchester has recently demanded. We can therefore understand Lord Northbrook going as far as his late speech on the Tariff Bill. But we cannot understand his going much further. And if, when he originally came to India, he intended to serve for five years, and his mind has been changed by something that has occurred in the interval, it is not altogether unreasonable to suppose that that something may be connected with such an interference with his financial policy as he himself regards as a reversal of it. Ordinarily a Viceroy might not regard the reversal of a financial policy as a deathblow. But the circumstances of the case are extraordinary. Pledges have been given or implied which cannot lightly be laid aside. It must be confessed, however, that all this is the merest guess-work. A child, who was once lifted up in the arms of a lawyer in order to excite the compassion of a crowded court, succeeded in doing so by a series of piercing shrieks, which, however, went rather beyond their mark when they excited curiosity, and led to the discovery that the lawyer was pinching the child. Somewhat in the same way, Lord Northbrook's retirement may be owing to something as remote from our own suggestions as was the child's cry from the causes to which the crowded court at first attributed it. But men must think, when curious things take place, and we trust that our readers will be of the opinion that in the foregoing suggestions we have been thinking as straight as possible on the whole.

THE NEW VICEROY.

The Bombay Gazette thinks that no one will be able to say henceforth that literature disqualifies men for public life in the English Empire, when one distinguished novelist is Prime Minister of England, and the son of another, himself a poet of celebrity, is the Viceroy designate of India. We do not pretend to know enough of Lord Lytton to be able to say whether the choice is a good one or otherwise. We should have thought that the Conservative Ministry, in these ticklish times, would have been safer with a tried statesman like Sir Bartle Frere at the head of the Government of India. But Lord Lytton is a young man with plenty of energy and considerable experience as a diplomatist; and Mr. Disraeli, who is a good judge of men, and who, fond as he is of providing for old friends, would not dare to job such an appointment as that of Governor-General of India, may be supposed to have picked out the best man of his party that he could think of for the post. One of the Premier's favourite maxims is that "a literary man who is at the same time a man of action is a two-edged weapon;" and he has probably discerned in Lord Lytton the union of these two qualifications. Socially, Lord Lytton has the reputation of being a most agreeable man, and his manner of life in India will probably revive the traditions of the hospitable and splendid Court of Lord Mayo.

The Pioneer has no difficulty in divining one leading idea at all events which must have been in Mr. Disraeli's mind when he selected Lord Lytton to be the next Viceroy of India. Not only in Europe, but in reference to the Government of India also, foreign affairs have been occupying a large place in the public mind lately. Curiously enough, the Baroda affair will probably seem the principal event of Lord Northbrook's regime to most people at home. And very unfairly, as we have frequently contended, it has been conceived at home that the Baroda affair was more unfortunately managed than was really the case. English critics of the transaction have generally failed to understand that there really were some large and comprehensive purposes aimed at by the Government of India in connection with the management of the famous inquiry. These came to grief more or less, no doubt. Lord Northbrook did not allow sufficiently for the absolute weakness of the instruments he was compelled to employ; but in politics, as in whist, there is a wide difference between bad play and playing with bad cards. However, without going into that question all over again, it is clear that the Government at home has been impressed with the idea that just now it is supremely necessary to choose a Governor-General whose genius will probably be found to lie in the direction of foreign policy. Lord Lytton, of course, has been engaged with questions of foreign policy all his life, and Mr. Disraeli may have the best reasons for knowing that he is entirely to be trusted. Again, even though Lord Lytton may have had no experience hitherto in matters of practical internal administration, the colleagues and advisers he will find ready to his hand in this country are very strong in this respect.

The Madras Times observes that Lord Lytton is a little over forty-four years of age—an age at which a man is very young for a statesman, but mature for an Anglo-Indian. Hitherto diplomacy has been his business and literature his amusement. If we recollect aright, he is at the present moment the British Ambassador at Lisbon, a post in which we dare say he has found ample opportunity to continue his literary employment. The list of works published under the names of "Owen Meredith," "Edward Trevor," and the Hon. Robert Bulwer shows that, if he often had spare time on his hands, he knew well how to use it. As Viceroy of India he will find plenty of work. Ill adapted as this country is for hard work on the part of Europeans, it is a fact that, in most positions of real importance here, the incumbents have to do far more work than the holders of similar places in England. The Viceroy is certainly no exception, and Lord Lytton will find governing an empire of 200 millions of people somewhat different work from writing despatches and sonnets alternately on the banks of the Tagus. It was thought that great things were to be done for India by sending her a financial genius to be her Viceroy. We do not know that those great things have been accomplished, but the secret system of Indian bureaucracy is so unfair to the reputation of great men that we are by no means inclined to say that history may not yet declare him to have been the financial saviour of the country. Probably no special good will be promised to us from the occupation of the viceregal chair by a literary genius; though it is not difficult to see that a mind in sympathy with the picturesque and romantic side of life, such as literary men often possess, is important in a statesman who has to deal with semi-barbarous, but proud and long-descended potentates.

The Times of India says that Lord Northbrook will retire from India carrying with him the respect of all and the regrets of many. An Earldom, indeed, is not a sufficient acknowledgment of the services which he has rendered. That step in the Peerage was fairly earned by his exertions in meeting the exigency of the famine and meeting it well. A Marquisate might very well have been accorded to the munificent host of the Prince of Wales on the occasion of the visit of the Heir to the Crown to India. If the retirement of Lord Northbrook is not altogether unexpected, he will be a bold man who will venture to say the same of the advent of Lord Lytton as his successor. When the Duke of Buckingham accepted the Governorship of Madras it was very generally asserted that his Grace went to that Presidency merely to qualify by a sort of apprenticeship as Governor for the post of Governor-General. Lord Northbrook had become more or less acquainted with Indian matters by a course of service as Under-Secretary of State for India extending over nearly two years, and it was considered that a short residence in Madras would suffice for the instruction of the Duke of Buckingham in at least the A B C of Indian administrative routine. But those who took that view of the phenomenon of a Duke consenting to act as Governor of one of the Presidencies must now admit that they were signally in error. And those who believed that Sir Bartle Frere had grounds for hoping that the dream of his life would be realised, find themselves equally mistaken. Neither of those who were popularly supposed to share between them the chances of accession to the Viceregal throne has been fortunate enough to be preferred, and a nobleman whose name no one ever coupled with India before, who as a diplomatist knows more about the English Embassy at Paris than about the India-office in London, and as a poet is more acquainted with the songs of Servia than with Administration reports which treat of the affairs of this country, is actually to be installed this spring in the Government House, Calcutta. Owen Meredith will be Governor-General of India before the summer comes! Mr. Disraeli's hand is palpable in this. Literary sympathy has no doubt decided the appointment. "Vivian Grey" takes a natural interest in the son of the author of "Pelham;" the novelist who finds himself a Prime Minister thinks it a very natural thing to convert a poet into a Viceroy. "What a statesman Corneille would have made," said the first Napoleon; "his imagination would have been invaluable in devising political combinations." Mr. Disraeli doubtless takes a similar view of the practical value of a poet's imagination in the Council Chamber. The desire to surprise once again the public mind by doing the very thing that no one expected perhaps counts for something in this nomination. Mr. Disraeli has just startled Europe by the purchase of the Suez Canal shares, and now he surprises the East by sending the gifted author of "Fables in Song" to wield the sceptre laid down by a weary financier whose thoughts were of tariffs and surpluses. So be it! we are surprised; we admit it fully. We can only hope that the author of the Fables in question will make as good a Governor-General as the author of "Coningsby" has proved himself to be a marvellous Prime Minister. Lord Lytton is certainly a man of rare mental gifts and of the highest culture.

TURKEY AND THE INDIAN MOHAMMEDANS.

The Pioneer thinks that whenever, if ever, the progress of change in the East of Europe leads to a manifest abandonment by England of her old attitude as the protector of Turkey, that event will create a serious feeling in India. The depth and strength of the emotions it will stir up cannot be gauged very accurately as yet, but English publicists do not seem to understand this side of the Turkish question. The Sultan is for the Mohammedans of India what the Pope is for the Catholics of Spain, very nearly. We have perhaps undeservedly been regarded here as his champions. That we have been so has been owing to accident rather than design. We fought the Crimean war, not for the sake of the Sultan's throne, but in order that we might not incur the embarrassments in which we should have been involved by its fall. Mohammedan India does not seem to have appreciated this fully, and has given us some credit which is not our due. Not that we have inspired the Mohammedans with gratitude on this account, but in their complicated estimate of our merits and demerits no doubt the fact that we have been the Sultan's friends has weighed in the scale; to this extent at least, that if we come to be looked upon as the Sultan's betrayers, there will be a very large addition to the sum of our demerits. A Mohammedan paper in the south of India has discussed the subject, and is now under the impression—a curiously wrong-headed one, of course—that the purchase of the Canal shares is equivalent to a revival of our policy as the champion of Turkey. It had seemed as if we were going to abandon the Kalipha; but says the Mussulman writer, as translated by a Madras contemporary:—"The ink was scarcely dry when this dishonourable and perfidious view of the duties of England held by the rich commercial classes and their papers was nobly falsified by the action taken by the English Government in purchasing the Suez Canal from the Khedive. This step proves that English statesmen are men who are not blinded by low motives to the greatness of their country and the necessity of protecting Turkey by extending the British shield over Egypt." The odd confusion of views shown here is very amusing; but the important point is, that any measures of action or inaction decided upon by the English Government in reference to Turkey cannot but have a powerful retentissement in India. The consideration is one which all Englishmen in India who comprehend it ought to import, so far as they are able, into the counsels of English statesmen. From the merely European standpoint it is liable to be overlooked.

ILLUMINATION OF THE MADRAS SURF.—We are told that the illumination of the surf, so happily suggested and carried out by Capt. Taylor, was undoubtedly the most beautiful sight presented to the Prince of Wales during his visit here, and it is much to be regretted that so few witnessed it, and that so little has been heard about it. Capt. Taylor had very considerately provided a box next to that of the Royal party on the pier for the members of the Press; but, unfortunately, it was not known to those concerned that such accommodation existed, and consequently it remained empty. Nevertheless, we have heard enough of the scene, and of the delight it caused, to be able to say a few words about it. The illumination was mainly caused by the casting of Greek fire upon the water, and the sight, as crowds of catamaran men cruised and swam about in the weird light, must have been like a scene from Dante's "Inferno." The long lines of curling surf, transformed into waves of liquid fire, were beautiful in the extreme, and the suite of the Prince found it simply impossible to get him away from contemplating the scene. His Royal Highness declared it to be the most beautiful thing he had ever seen in all his experience, and those present joined heartily in the judgment. Sir Bartle Frere was very much afraid that some of the catamaran men would fall victims to the evening's amusement, and was much relieved when it was explained to him that these creatures are much more fish than flesh, and can take far better care of themselves in the sea than on the land. It is a pity that a sight so beautiful and so unique should not be repeated on some suitable opportunity. We all of us owe something to the surf for past favours, and it would be some consolation to see it made useful once in a way. Capt. Taylor's notion of turning "the curse of Madras" into a thing of beauty was an extremely happy one; and no doubt Calcutta is now crying with envy that she has no surf to light up.—Madras Times.

THE MILITARY SHOW AT DELHI.

DELHI, Jan. 11.—Four long miles completely lined with soldiers—lined on both sides, and with men standing shoulder to shoulder—nearly all of these Europeans, is a sight not often witnessed in any part of the world. By general orders for the military, and in circulars for the civilians, we were all warned last night to be early in our places, and that after 8.30 A.M. the various roads in the Cantonments would be closed by the police against all conveyances. But the authorities here seem to have taken time by the forelock. At 7.30 A.M. I was on my way to the Jumma Musjid, and was told that the carriage could go no further. The morning was bitterly cold, and so a walk of half a mile or so was what a Frenchman would call a "distraction." On the steep steps of the Musjid were assembled some thousands of natives, row upon row, tier upon tier, all wrapped up against the bitter east wind, but still showing a variety of colour in their different dresses which made them look like an immense parterre of variegated flowers. The Musjid was one of the very best points from which the procession could be seen, for it was plainly visible, marching past us, as it were, on a semi-circle of road nearly half a mile long. The walls, terraces, and balconies of the building were reserved for Europeans, and a few—very few—of the native Rajas now in Delhi. The Prince was due at the railway station at 9 A.M., and precisely at one minute past the hour the first gun of the Royal salute proclaimed his arrival. In a very short time we could perceive the head of the procession winding out of the Fort. It was headed by an officer of the Quarter-master General's Department, whose special business it was to keep the pace sufficiently slow to avoid all blunders in the rear. To him succeeded a squadron of the 10th Hussars,—the men exceedingly well set up, the horses in the condition which is never seen in any army but our own, and both Hussars and horses looking as if they felt a pride in themselves and in the work they had to do. One might go a very long way before meeting with as fine a body of men as those which formed the Prince's escort to-day, and belonging to the corps of which he is the Colonel. Following close behind this squadron of the 10th came the A troop A Brigade of Royal Horse Artillery, the men mounted on and the guns drawn entirely by chesnuts. As I shall see all these corps again at the march past to-morrow, I will not stop now to comment upon them more than to say that this troop of Horse Artillery was about as near perfection as it was possible to be. Next came a troop of the 4th Bengal Native Cavalry, in their deep red native tunics, dark puggrees, white breeches and jack boots, well horsed and armed, as all native horsemen, with the native tulwar, riding well, looking every inch of them like soldiers, and a great number being decorated with the medal which shows that the bearer was true to his salt during the bloody days of treachery in 1857.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

STATION TALK.

BENARES, Jan. 6.—His Royal Highness had barely time to take breath (and lunch) after the municipal address, when it was time for him to start to lay the foundation-stone of the new Subscription Hospital. On his progress there was the same positively amazing concourse of people. Where his route crossed transverse streets, as far as the eye could reach down them, the whole roadway was blocked with human beings, few of whom could have seen much more than the spike of the royal helmet. But perhaps even that gratified them! On his road the Prince visited the Benares College, and admired the building much. He next gave a quarter of an hour to the assembled children of the various schools of Benares, when a hymn of welcome was chanted by a multitude of small voices in his honour. All this made him late at the hospital, where a brilliant assemblage of English ladies and gentlemen, with native notabilities of the city and division, had long been gathered. This scene was very remarkable. On one side of the great platform, shaded by a monstrous shamiana, the English ladies were seated; on the other the native men. It was hard to say which shone most gaily. Gold and silver tissues certainly sparkled most abundantly on the masculine side, but I think I must give my suffrage for the modest silks and muslins of the ladies. The centre of the platform was kept open for the ceremony. At one end was the foundation-stone, at the other, on a dais raised by three steps, was the chair of the Prince, at his side the Lieutenant-Governor and their respective suites, while, most impressive of all, all around crowded a hundred, perhaps two or three hundred deep, an absolutely countless, an awful multitude. The calm, the silence, the good order, so voluntary and spontaneous—for no power could have enforced it—was to my weak mind beautiful and almost pathetic. "What came they out for to see?" The ceremony was well conducted, and went off without a hitch, but would be tiresome to describe in detail. The Governor-general's Agent asked permission, on behalf of the Maharajah of Benares and other subscribing gentlemen, to present an address, which, on his Royal Highness assenting, the Maharajah who, I am sorry to say (for I remember the time when no keener sportsman or more courteous host could be found in India than the noble owner of those rare preserves of Chakia), appears very infirm, tottered up, with the support of the Governor-general's Agent, to present. Syud Ahmad Khan then read a history of the hospital, or rather an account of the need of one, and the efforts made to procure funds. After this the Prince stepped down to the stone, accepted the trowel of solid gold (an offering from the Maharajah), and performed the usual taps and dabs with it, after which, according to the forms and ceremonies in such case made and provided, he affected the proper intense anxiety as to whether the stone was properly laid, and directed the engineer to "prove" it with the plumb, the level, and the square. When his Royal Highness's mind was relieved on this score, he gave some taps with the mallet of ebony which the Maharajah handed to him, and pronounced the foundation-stone well and truly laid, at which good news the band struck up a triumphal march. The Prince then received the Maharajah of Vizianagram, giving him precisely the same degree of distinction as his rival the Maharajah of Benares, and, finally, Syud Ahmad Khan.—Pioneer Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

LIGHT RAILWAYS.—The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has written a minute regarding the possibility or desirability of making certain light railways in Bengal to supply the defective means of communication in the province.

SECRETARIAT.—It is stated that Mr. Allan Hume, the Secretary to Government in the Agriculture and Revenue Departments, is about to proceed on furlough, and that probably either Mr. Howell, of the Home Department, or Mr. Geoghegan, will be placed in the officiating appointment.

POLO AT CALCUTTA.—At a polo match played between six Manipurs and six men of the Calcutta Club, each party won two goals. The fifth was a drawn match. Calcutta was represented by Captain Wallace, Messrs. C. Hill, W. and G. Thomas, Fox, and Moore. The Prince of Wales took a lively interest in the proceedings.

COLONEL HYDE.—Colonel Hyde, R. E., mint-master, Calcutta, was entertained at a farewell banquet at the United Service Club on Wednesday evening, Jan. 5, by the officers of the Royal Engineers at present in Calcutta. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief after dinner proposed the health of the guest of the evening.

THE PRINCE AND MR. LAMBERT.—Before leaving Calcutta his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales presented Mr. Lambert, the Deputy Commissioner of Police, with a ring, and a letter of thanks for the manner in which he had performed his duties during the Royal visit. H.R.H. also presented Lady and Sir Stuart Hogg with lithographic portraits of himself and the Princess.

THE COURT-MARTIAL ON SERGEANT DAVIE.—Quarter-Master Sergeant Davie has been sentenced by the court-martial which tried him to undergo twelve months' rigorous imprisonment. This man was placed under arrest about the 1st of July last, and it was only last week that he was aware of either the verdict of the court or the punishment awarded him. It cannot be said that military justice has made indecent haste in this instance.—Darjiling News.

HOT MINERAL SPRINGS.—About sixteen marches up the Ganges valley from Dehra Dun there are hot mineral springs, which have quite cured the rheumatism (malarial) of a correspondent. Only one other Englishman,—so we are told—has bathed in these healing waters; and in both cases the cure was most successful. Huri is the place to go to, and by way of the Ogla Valley. The spring bursts out from between a couple of stones, some two or three hundred feet above the level of the Ganges. A fakir lives there, and the Raja of Teri has built a square stone tank, into which the water is brought by a cover drain. A thick steam rises from the tank, and there is a strong smell of sulphur.—Pioneer.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL IN BAHAR.—We learn from Bahar that a sum of no less than four lakhs of rupees has already been subscribed for the establishment of an Industrial School for the teaching of the practical sciences, with a view of commemorating the visit of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. This is the sum which Bengal hopes to obtain, with the assistance of Dr. Sarkar's Science Association. It must be admitted, however, that Behar has taken the lead in this matter, and Sir Richard Temple has not been backward to acknowledge the fact, for he has, we are informed, promised to make over the buildings forming the Pusa Stud to the Committee appointed to help in the establishment of the College.—Englishman.

THE CASE OF CAPT. LIOT.—In commenting on the sad case of Capt. Liot, R.H., recently, we (Times of India) took the opportunity of expressing a hope that when that officer had served out his richly deserved sentence there might still be a chance for him in another sphere of life. We are glad to see that in the recent outbreak in the Agra jail, which might have terminated fatally for the Superintendent, and disastrously for many others if any large number of the convicts had escaped, ex-Capt. Liot behaved with coolness and bravery. Seizing a crowbar which lay handy, he threatened to brain the first man who advanced, and there is no doubt his resolute conduct did much to nip the outbreak in the bud. We hear an application for a portion of his term of imprisonment to be remitted will be made, and we fancy that the application will not be refused.

OPENING OF THE WARDAH VALLEY RAILWAY.—The Wardah Valley State Railway was opened by the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces on the 24th of last month to within five miles of the colliery at Warrora. Coal can now be remuneratively supplied, for hitherto it would not have paid to cart the fuel any considerable distance across a country where there are no made roads leading to the coal fields; nor is carting desirable, owing to the friable character of the Chanda coal. We hear that Mr. Julian Danvers, C.B., and Mr. Rendell, of the India Office, are now visiting the Wardah State Railway and the Warrora Colliery with Mr. Armstrong, Chief Engineer of these works and of the Central Provinces. Mr. Danvers has seen the railways in the Bombay Presidency, and will in due course visit the railways in Bengal, the North-West Provinces, and the Punjab.—Pioneer, Jan. 8.

ARMS AND AMMUNITION IN INDIA.—Fire-arms of three different kinds, wanting three sorts of ammunition, are simultaneously in use by infantry in India. First, there is the old Enfield muzzle-loading rifle, the weapon of most regiments; the Snider breech-loader, with which most of the European regiments and some of the native corps are armed; and, thirdly, the Martini-Henri, belonging to those troops which have just come out. Such a state of affairs must increase the likelihood of confusion and mistakes in time of active operations, says the Pioneer. A single column of troops may now be made up of infantry armed with three varying weapons, requiring three separate styles of cartridges; and this is directly opposed to that uniformity so essential to military success. Germany, ever ready as she is to learn and to keep pace with the age, is this year adopting a uniform bore and a uniform cartridge. Common sense surely urges us to follow her example.

THE PRINCE AT UNAO.—The Lucknow correspondent of a contemporary gives the following account of the Prince's pig-sticking party at Unao:—His Royal Highness rode over perfectly awful ground at a perfectly awful pace, and the bigger the tusker the more anxious he was to get up to him. He got one first spear, and ought to have had two others, i.e., it was he who really 'rode' the pigs, though—sic vos, non vobis—others on fresh horses got the prod. An episode to a serious accident which unfortunately occurred got the Prince as much liking for his kindness of heart as he had won by his daring as a sportsman. Lord Carington's horse had put his foot in a hole and fallen with his rider, whose collar-bone was broken. The Prince was much distressed. He did not stand still, however, and summon others to the rescue. He ran with his Royal legs to where one of the ladies was seated on an elephant to borrow her umbrella, and ran off back with it, a full hundred yards, to where Lord Carington lay, whom it was desirable to shelter from the now hot sun. Captain Maynard received a severe blow from the bough of a tree, and several of the suite had nasty falls.

THE WEATHER AND CROPS.—The Department of Revenue, Agriculture and Commerce reports on the state of the season and prospects of the crops for the week ending the 8th January, 1876, that no rain has fallen in Madras; it is wanted in Trichinopoly and Tanjor, but prospects are reported to be generally satisfactory. No rain has fallen in the Bombay Presidency except a slight shower at Shikarpur in Sind; the rabi continues to promise well, but cotton in Dharwar has been almost destroyed by blight. There has been no rain in the Central Provinces, Berar, Central India or Rajputana; prospects continue good. There have been slight showers in the Sub-Himalayan districts of Lower Bengal; otherwise there is no change; rain is generally required for the winter crops. Showers have also fallen in Oudh, and in Kumaun, Rohilkhand and Meerut, in the North-Western Provinces, prospects are good. In the Punjab slight rain is reported from Dera Ismail Khan and Peshawar; prospects are everywhere favourable. Reports from Burmah are good. In Assam some rain has fallen in the upper districts; none in Silhet, where it is wanted. None is reported from Mysor, where the condition of the crops remains unchanged.

CIVILIAN GRIEVANCES.—We understand that one of the first questions likely to engage the Committee at present sitting, with the Hon. A. Eden as President, to consider what is generally called the junior civilians' grievances, is, whether by offering a fair inducement to the men in the overcrowded years, between 1865 and 1867, by whom the block in promotion is likely to be caused, a certain number of them might be induced to retire. Some of these gentlemen are at present entitled to certain annuities should they retire, but they can hardly expect the Government to allow them to retire on their full annuities, unles very good cause is shown. With some moderation in their demands, there is, we believe, little doubt but that satisfactory arrangements could be come to, and the gentlemen who entered the service in the years alluded to are still sufficiently young to enter upon a fresh career in England, especially with a moderate annuity to depend upon. If some eight or ten of them could be induced to accept reasonable terms, one of the chief difficulties in the way of promotion amongst the juniors would be removed, but they must not be too exorbitant in their claims.—Englishman.

THE NATIVE SURVIVORS OF THE LUCKNOW GARRISON.—In describing the laying of the foundation stone of the monument to the native officers and men who fell in the defence of the Lucknow Residency, a correspondent writes:—All the survivors of that terribly sublime struggle had been invited to it. I had no notion that the survivors would be so many. I think there must have been two hundred of them, of all ranks and conditions. Some had evidently prospered; they held commissioned appointments, and had official right to the respectful treatment which the Prince accorded them, of touching their sword hilts with his hand, and so personally recognising and accepting their individual service, as from trusted warriors to grateful Prince. In some cases he shook the hand of particularly useful or gallant champions. Others were apparently of the bunnia or business class, and some looked like decayed mussulchis. It was distressing to think that Royal servants of India should be in such penury as their attire denoted, even though it should have been produced by their own improvidence. Some, indeed a great many, were quite infirm old men, who could hardly totter into the Prince's presence, or understand with their dull ears and enfeebled intellect the gracious words which he addressed to them. But rich or poor, adult or decrepid, his Royal Highness insisted on giving individual audience to each, and a very long time it took. It was very pathetic, and many a soft cheek was bedewed with tears.

STATION TALK.

PUNAMALLI, Jan. 5.—On the recommendation of the Board of Revenue the Government has sanctioned an increase to the salary of such persons as hold the combined offices of Deputy Tahsildar and Sub-Magistrate. Mr. J. Somasundrum Chetty, the Deputy Tahsildar of Punamalli, will thus be benefited.—Owing to the indisposition of Deputy Surgeon General Thompson, B.M.S., Surgeon-Major J. Davidge, from the Mount, was deputed to act for him as President of the Invaliding Board which assembled in the Depot Hospital on the 27th and 28th ultimo. About ninety-six men were recommended for change of climate to England, but they are not expected to leave the station till February or March next. The medical staff at this place has been augmented by the arrival of Surgeon G. H. LeMottee, vice Dr. James, invalided.—Cholera, I regret to say, is still hanging about in the native quarters of the Cantonment. Several deaths from that disease have lately occurred, and Major Saunders has taken steps to procure the services of a Hospital Assistant, who has since arrived. It is said that the major has wisely determined upon removing the scavengers'-and chucklers' parcherries (favoured places of the epidemic) to a spot away off on the Avady-road, near the slaughter-house. This must surely prove to be a boon, and he cannot be too highly esteemed for it.—The Rev. J. M. Walker, M.A., contemplates a short holiday trip to Yercand. He well deserves it, after the incessant work he has lately had in the station; and it is to be hoped he will return to us all the better for the change.

NORTH ARCOT, Jan. 5.—It was thought that rain would have fallen, as portentious clouds banked up on one or two mornings, but they cleared away ere noon. Most of our rivers are now quite dry, and so are, I am sorry to say, a good number of tanks, and some of our best, both as to capacity and means of supply. The water in the ponds could easily be sounded, and that in the wells, public and private, is getting low. The country is beginning to look dry and bare, the trees are shedding their leaves, cattle are suffering from a want of pasturage, our roads are breaking up, and, in short, the present condition of affairs bodes no good for the future.—The open market in Ranipet, that was closed to the public for some time owing to the prevalence of cholera, as it was alleged, has been revived, and has been well attended. Cloth merchants from Madras and other places mustered strong, and, no doubt, did a good stroke of business during the holidays, as our "Aryan brother" takes immensely to chintz, albeit not of "gentlemanly colours." I may mention that a latrine has been constructed for the use of those attending the shandy.—I am glad to be able to chronicle that although the present is ominous of future hardship, prices of all serials remain stationary. Vegetables are supplied in fair quantities, and at normal rates; and wild game of sorts is to be had, but not fish.—The general health is at present good, and with the exception of cold and slight attacks of fever, few cases occur of any kind. Government have long held out inducements to the natives to apply for aid and medicine when attacked with sickness, and have frequently remarked on the apathy of the people in not responding to the invitation. Now, however, it appears that they do appreciate both the treatment and medicines; so much so that our local Chancellor of the Exchequer finds it extremely difficult to find means to cover all bills presented, and wants to know, you know, a good deal about the why and the wherefore—which is invariably indicative of "hard times."—Madras Times Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE GOVERNOR OF MADRAS.—His Grace the Duke of Buckingham started from Madras on Sunday evening, the 9th Jan., by the B.I.S.N. Co.'s steamer Socotra, for Coconada, whence he would proceed on his tour in the Godavari district. The Hon. R. S. Ellis, the Hon. W. Hudleston, Colonel Michael, Mr. Elwin, Dr. Druitt, and some other gentlemen were on the pier to take leave of his Grace. His Grace and party proceeded to the place of embarkation on the pier in the pier carriage, and, after his Grace had taken leave of Lady Mary Grenville, Lady Caroline Grenville, and the other ladies and gentlemen assembled there, he went into the port boat, which was escorted to the steamer by eight catamarans. His Grace was accompanied by the Lady Anna Gore Langton, Lady Anne Grenville, Mr. D. F. Carmichael, Revenue Secretary to Government; Captain Taylor, Master Attendant; Captain Willoughby, A.D.C. to his Grace the Governor; Major Bertie Hobart, Military Secretary to his Grace, and Mr. Langton.

A PROMISING MADRASSI.—We are told by the Madras Athenæum that Mr. P. Ratnavelu Chetty, the eldest son of the Madras Municipal Assessor, and a graduate of the Madras University, has been pursuing in England the prescribed course for the Indian Civil Service, and keeping his Term in Lincoln's Inn. This young man, with his love for academical distinction, joined the Balliol College in Oxford a few months ago, and has since passed the Balliol Mathematical Scholarship Examination with success. The Examiners placed him first on the list, but as his two years' course for the Indian Civil Service will expire shortly, and he cannot, therefore, possibly stay in Oxford long enough to go through the regular University course for obtaining the full benefit of the scholarship, the college have conferred upon him an honorary scholarship, and resolved to give him a prize of books worth about £50, in recognition of the way in which he has acquitted himself at the examination, a thing which appears to have no precedent in the annals of the University. He also won a prize for distinction at the last periodical examination for the Indian Civil Service, in one of the Indian languages; and intends going in for the Junior Mathematical Scholarship, the greatest distinction that Oxford can confer on an under-graduate, as also for the Sanskrit Scholarship, if it does not interfere with the other courses to which he is bound.

THE HAIDARABAD RELIGIOUS MURDER.—The following details of the late murder reach us from Haidarabad:—The Pathan sect of Maidharis had conceived great enmity against the Maulvi Mohammed Zuma Khan, who was the Nizam's Arabic tutor, on account of a book written by him at the request of the Kazi of the city to refute their particular heresy, but for the past two years nothing has been done. On Tuesday evening (11th Jan.), about seven o'clock, the Maulvi, having finished his prayers, sat facing the door of the mosque, in which only one other person remained, reading his Koran, which rested on a low lectern before him. The assassin, who is a Pathan of about twenty-five years of age, entered with a salaam to the Maulvi, and as if for prayer passed round towards the sanctuary (Arabic, Mihrab, place of wrestling). Approaching the unfortunate Maulvi from behind, he stabbed him four times with a dagger, and started to make his escape, but the victim's servant, who was waiting for his master at the foot of the steps, raised an alarm, and a police peon struck at the murderer with his stick; but the latter, dagger in hand, pushed past him, when the peon heroically brought him down with a brick skilfully aimed at his head. He was conveyed to hospital and thence to jail. He has since confessed that the plot was of long-standing, and has given up the names of those concerned, who were arrested on the Minister's return. On Friday, the eve of the Buckreed, considerable fears of a breach of the peace were felt, and guards were doubled at all important points. At one time it was reported that two men had been killed in the Residency Bazaars, and that a hundred insurgents held "Oliphant's Bridge." This, however, proved to be false, but great alarm had been excited among the Pathans by a report that their property would be attached, and by the arrests which had been made, in effecting one of which the police used fire-arms, one man and horse being killed, and two men wounded. All fears are over for the present, but the excitement will probably be repeated on the day of the execution, and possibly on the occasion of the Mohorrum. All Friday and Saturday the reformed troops were ready to turn out, but their services were not required.—Bombay Gazette, Jan. 17.

Brig.-Gen. Phayre has been commanding the Division during the Major-General's absence.

NAVAL ITEMS.—The French corvette D'Assay, Captain Barbigny, arrived in harbour from Goa on January 8. She was received with a salute of twenty-one guns from the men-of-war in the harbour, and also a similar salute from the Saluting Battery on shore, to which the D'Assay replied by a salute of twenty-one guns.—Admiral Macdonald, Naval Commander-in-Chief on the East Indian Station, was expected to arrive in Bombay from Calcutta on Friday, Jan. 21. The Admiral accompanied the Prince of Wales from Madras to Calcutta; and he was making the journey across to Bombay overland, stopping en route at Benares and Jubalpur.

THE UNIVERSITY OF BOMBAY.—The following notification has been published in the Bombay Government Gazette:—H.E. the Governor in Council has been pleased to nominate the following gentlemen to be Fellows of the University of Bombay:—Hon. Rao Bahadur Bechardas Ambaidas, C.S.I.; Sir T. Madhavarow, K.C.S.I.; Bomanji Sorabji, Esq., L.C.E.; Byronath Mungesh, Esq.; Rev. Charles Cook, B.A.; Cowasji Manockji Limji, Esq.; Rev. H. Martin Wood, Esq.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZES AT THE GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—The annual distribution of prizes at this college was held on Friday evening, Jan. 4, in the lecture-room, where almost all the students had assembled, and were seated in regular semi-circular lines on the class benches. A very striking feature of this gathering of students was the vast minority of European faces, and the great number of puggeries and the peculiar shaped Parsees hats, not to omit a large proportion of Portuguese youths. In the middle of the hollow formed by this semi-circle were placed a number of chairs, which were occupied by the professors and other gentlemen interested in the college. The Hon. J. Gibbs, who presided on the occasion, sat in front of a table, on which were placed the numerous medals and prizes which were to be distributed to the deserving students. On his right sat the Hon. Alexander Rogers, and to the left Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Bart. The principal then read the report of the college, which was in every respect favourable, and showed marked progress during the last year. The prizes were next distributed by the Hon. Chairman to each student as he presented himself in answer to his name. After an address from the President the assembly broke up.

THE EUROPEAN GENERAL HOSPITAL.—We are glad to find that the Bombay Government have so far abandoned the scheme of the Public Works Department, to turn a building in Fort St. George into a European General Hospital, as to have requested four distinguished members of the Medical Department to form themselves into a committee to consider the merits of the whole subject and to submit their proposals to Government with as little delay as possible. The letter on the subject from the Acting Chief Secretary to Government very clearly defines the points that the committee will have chiefly to take into consideration, but at the same time the committee are driven into a corner and will find their discussions confined within somewhat narrow limits. There is one point, however, on which the committee will not differ very widely; they will not hesitate to condemn the site chosen by the Public Works Department. In its existing condition that site is utterly unfit for a hospital, even if the awkward plan for adopting the existing buildings thereon to the purpose were feasible, which it is not. The present sheds in which the European General Hospital is now placed would not probably become unfit for occupation during the time the construction of the new railway station is going on or until considerable progress had been made; but any difficulty of that nature might be disposed of by making use of the new Sailors' Home building, which, though not constructed for the purposes of a hospital, would nevertheless form an excellent temporary abode for the patients in the European General Hospital, and might be used for that purpose without causing inconvenience to any one. A great point has been gained in having the question entirely re-opened; the firmness—to use a mild term—with which the Public Works Department stuck to its own scheme has yielded to the high pressure brought to bear upon it, and though the Acting Chief Secretary to Government has somewhat adroitly suggested, in his letter, that the Committee will have the advantage of perusing the plans of the Public Works Department, and hints are thrown out that any alterations in these plans which the Committee may propose could be easily carried out, the members of the Committee are too sincere in the cause they have in hand and are too experienced to be led away by such sirencial temptations as these. There is now every probability that the new European General Hospital will be erected in a healthy locality, and that the building will be such as the European residents in Bombay can look upon with pleasure and satisfaction.—Bombay Gazette.

Ceylon.

MR. DOUGLAS.—Official intelligence has been received by telegram that the Hon. John Douglas, Auditor-General in Ceylon, is to proceed to Singapore as Colonial Secretary, succeeding Mr. W. W. Birch.

JUDICIAL.—The Ceylon Times has had news of the promotion of Mr. Douglas and the appointment of Sir W. H. Doyle to the Chief Justiceship of Ceylon confirmed by official intimation, the appointment being noticed therein as "for the time," whatever that may be supposed to convey. Sir W. H. Doyle, says the Times, "may be regarded as a still more favoured official than any we have previously noticed, having reference to his past career in one small Colony with a mixed population of 39,000 scattered over twenty islands. Sir William does not appear to have practised at the Bar, and his present salary is not more than £900 per annum, with the addition of a few fees. He was born in the Colony, the son of the late Mr. Edward Doyle, of Nassau, the capital of the Brahmas; was called to the Bar in 1846, and in the following year was appointed to an acting police magistracy. Sir William Doyle married Miss Sarah Johnson, daughter of Mr. Samuel Johnson of Nassau."

RETURNED TO DUTY.

The undermntd. officers have reported their return from England :—

REVISED FURLOUGH AND LEAVE RULES APPLICABLE TO THE STAFF CORPS AND INDIAN LOCAL AND MEDICAL SERVICES.

Dec. 30, 1875.—Under instructions from H.M.'s Government, the Right Hon. the Governor General in Council is pleased to publish the following revised Furlough and Leave Rules applicable to the Staff Corps and Indian Local and Medical Services :—

1. Officers included in Schedule A may receive, after five years' service in India, or under the Government of India, one year's furlough, and an additional year for each subsequent five years' service. Furlough not taken at the time it becomes due is not lost, and can, subject to these Rules, be taken later.

2. An officer may receive at any time any portion of the furlough to which he is entitled. But, except under Rule 8, he may not be absent from duty on any ground for more than three years consecutively ; nor, on return from furlough, may he receive, except under Rule 6, any further portion of the furlough to which he is entitled until after the interval of two years.

3. It must be distinctly understood that furlough is subject to the exigencies of the public service. Officers commanding regiments and heads of departments will forward no application for furlough unless able to satisfy the superior authorities that the officer's services can be spared without any inconvenience to the public service.

4. Furlough does not involve forfeiture of appointment, may be spent anywhere, and counts as service for pension.

5. An officer on furlough receives (up to, but not beyond, the sum of £1,000 a year) half the emoluments of his office, computed according to a rate of exchange to be fixed in each year by the Secretary of State; but in any case he does not receive less than £250 a year. The emoluments of his office include all pay, staff corps pay, staff salary, and Indian allowances he would receive in respect to it if he were on duty, and for the purpose of each payment his office is the office he fills on the day when that payment becomes due.

6. Upon certificate of a Medical Board an officer not entitled to furlough, if he has served not less than two years in India, may receive it for any period not exceeding two years ; but such furlough will be deducted from his next accruing furlough until it is paid off. An officer will not be allowed to anticipate furlough under this Rule to an aggregate amount of more than two years.

7. An officer who has exhausted the furlough obtainable under these Rules, and who may be certified by a Medical Board to be still unfit for duty, will be placed temporarily or permanently on half-pay, according to the circumstances of the case.

8. Under very urgent circumstances special furlough may be granted for private affairs, which need not be paid back ; but it will be in all cases without any kind of pay, and will not count for pension.

9. Advances for passage money, on need shown, will be granted to officers on furlough, to be recovered in manner specified at the time of the grant ; in India, at the discretion of the local Government ; and in England, at the discretion of the Secretary of State.

10. Leave may be granted for any period not exceeding six months at a time, and may not, except for very urgent reasons, to be specially reported to the Government of India, be renewed till after six months have elapsed from its expiration. It must be spent at some place east of the 40th degree of east longitude. Subject to these conditions, it may be granted or refused entirely at the discretion of the local authorities, who in granting it shall fix its duration, and may fix the limits within which it shall be spent, and whether during its continuance half-pay and allowances are to be deducted for the payment of a substitute; and they may grant it as preparatory to furlough or for the purpose of a medical examination. Leave counts as service for pension and furlough. The local authorities shall be defined for the purpose of this Rule by the Government of India.

11. Leave and furlough are reckoned from and to the close of the days named in the order granting them.

12. The position of officers not included in Schedule A will be unchanged as respects leave or furlough.

13. Officers now in the service placing themselves from a given date under these Rules shall count service for pension up to that date under the Rules to which they were then subject.

SCHEDULE A.

Officers entering the Staff Corps or Indian Medical Service, and Warrant Officers attaining that rank, after the 31st December, 1875 ; and

Any other Officers, Commissioned or Warrant, belonging to the Indian Army or Medical Service, or Officers of the Staff Corps, who, after the 31st December, 1875, shall, before asking for leave or furlough, apply in writing to their local Governments to be placed definitely upon this Schedule : but their services for furlough under Rule 1 shall commence from the date of such entry or such application respectively.

Any Officers in civil employment declared by the Government of India to be under Civil Leave Rules shall not be under these Rules.

 The last-pay certificate issued to an Officer to whom furlough or leave has been granted shall state the pay to which, under Rule 5, he is at that date entitled in respect to the office he is holding, noticing the date, if any fixed, at which he will vacate it.

With advertence to the foregoing Rules, the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council is pleased to notify :—

I. That no "extra or special allowances" drawn by an Officer, which are now excluded from the account in calculating furlough pay under the Rules of 1868, can be reckoned in calculating furlough pay under these Rules (Rule 5).

II. That the Governments of the three Presidencies, or their Excellencies the Commanders-in-Chief in regard to officers serving directly under them, shall be held to be the "local authorities" named in Rule 10.

III. That, pending further orders, a staff officer granted leave under Rule 10 shall receive, as heretofore, the pay or staff corps pay of his rank, and half the staff salary of his appointment during such leave; but full staff salary may be allowed him for the first two months (as now during privilege leave) when he makes approved arrangements for the performance of his duties during that period. In such cases the G.O. granting the leave must state that the first two months are to be on full staff pay.

N.B. It is distinctly to be understood that the Rule regarding the pay to be drawn on leave under paragraph 10 is liable to be modified at any time in any way th the Government of India may deem expedient.

IV. Pending furat orders, these Rules are not applicable to any officer in civil employ.

Dec. 31.—No. 319.—The undermentioned officer is permitted to proceed to Europe on private affairs :—

Capt. W. L. Samuels, of the Bengal staff corps, assistant commissioner, 2nd grade, Hazaribagh, acting political agent of Hill Tipperah, for two years, under Rule IX. of the Regulations of 1868.

R. L. MANGLES, Offcg. Sec. to the Govt. of Bengal.

INDIA OFFICE.—At the recent open competitive examination for three clerkships of the superior class, in the accounts and store branches of the India Office, Messrs. H. W. Badcock, T. H. Humphrys, and J. H. Bell obtained the first three places.

THE CALCUTTA JUTE MILLS COMPANY.—The arguments in the special case of the above Company v. Nicholson, surveyor of taxes, were resumed and concluded on Feb. 2, in the Exchequer Court. The Court then gave judgment in favour of the Crown.

INDIAN APPEAL.—MUSSUMAT PHOOLBAS KOOMOUR V. LULLA JOGESHUR SAHOY.—Judgment was given by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in this long and intricate Bengal appeal, reversing the decree in all but one of the nine causes appealed. No costs were given, as the appeal was ex parte only.

DEATH OF MAJOR-GENERAL WILLIAM FULLERTON.—The death is announced of this officer, late of the Bengal Army. He was a son of the late Lord Fullerton, entered the Indian army in 1839, and served in the Gwalior campaign of 1843, including the battle of Maharajpore, and the Punjaub campaign of 1845-46, including the battle of Ferozeshah. In 1862 he was appointed Deputy Judge Advocate General of the Sirhind division of the Bengal Army, and about a year ago he retired from the service with the rank and pension of a major-general.

DEATH OF LORD MELVILLE.—On Jan. 31, Henry Dundas, third Viscount Melville, died at Melville Castle, near Edinburgh. The deceased was born in 1801, entered the army in 1819, commanded the 83rd Foot in the insurrection in Upper Canada in 1837-38, and commanded the Bombay column of the army of the Punjaub at the siege of Mooltan, and at the battle of Goojerat in 1849. He was created G.C.B. in 1865, and appointed colonel-commandant of the 60th Foot in 1863. Lord Melville was aide de-camp to William IV., and afterwards to Queen Victoria. He was Governor of Edinburgh Castle and Deputy-Lieutenant of Midlothian.

BRITISH INDIAN TEA COMPANY.—The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on Feb. 3, at the offices, Great Winchester-street-buildings; Mr. A. R. Capel, the chairman, presiding. The report stated that the teas sold to date of the crop of season 1874-75 had realised net £15,188, and assuming that the remainder of the crop realised 1s. 6d. per lb. net, the total proceeds might be estimated at about £25,682, while, in the absence of closed accounts from India not yet to hand, the expenditure of the season might be estimated at about £22,228. The report was adopted unanimously, and a vote of thanks to the chairman and directors terminated the proceedings.

INDIAN TROOPSHIP.—The Crocodile, Indian troopship, steamed into Portsmouth Harbour on Feb. 1. She left Bombay on the 31st December; Suez, January 14; Port Said, 16; and arrived at Malta on the 21st, leaving the following day. She brings the 23rd Brigade of Royal Artillery, comprising 19 officers, 340 men, 51 women, and 131 children, and which will be stationed at head-quarters; Nos. 4, 5, 6, and 7 Batteries for Woolwich; No. 2 for Sheerness; and No. 3 for Tilbury Fort and Purfleet; and draughts from sundry corps, invalids, and time-expired men, amounting in the aggregate to 17 officers, 417 men, 24 women, and 54 children. The Jumna, Indian troopship, sailed on Friday for Bombay, with the 2nd Battalion 16th Foot on board.

PROFESSOR MAX MULLER.—The following official notice relative to the retirement of Professor Max Muller has been issued at Cambridge:—"Whereas it is expedient to allow Professor Max Muller to devote himself without interruption to the studies on the ancient literature of India which he has hitherto prosecuted with so much success and with so much honour to the University, in a Convocation to be holden on Tuesday, Feb. 15, at two o'clock, the following form of decree will be submitted to the House:—'That the provisions of Statt. Tit. 4, sect. 1, § 37, cl. 3, be suspended, and that the electors proceed to the nomination of a deputy, to be approved by the Vice-Chancellor, and the deputy shall receive one-half of the salary of the present Professor.'—J. E. SEWELL, Vice-Chancellor.—Delegates' Room."

EASTERN TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The half-yearly meeting was held on Jan. 28, when the report was read and adopted. The gross receipts for the six months ending September 30, 1875, had been £185,251, as compared with £200,050, the receipts for the half-year ending March 31 previously. As regards the dividend the chairman said that if the system of honest and fair telegraphy were carried out they would be paying 20 per cent. dividend instead of 5 per cent. They were bound, however, as all telegraph companies were, by a convention which was in force. It was not the word system which had reduced their dividends, as it only came into operation on the 1st inst., and, so far, they had had no reason to regret its adoption. The cost of the new cable would not, he believed, exceed £200 a mile. The report and accounts were adopted nem. con. The company announce the repair of their Suez-Aden cable, thus re-establishing communication with India and the Far East, via Falmouth. The protracted delay in repairing was due entirely to unfavourable weather. The cable is stated to be in excellent condition.

NEW GUNBOAT FOR THE EAST INDIA AND CHINA STATIONS.—Messrs. Robert Napier and Sons, of Glasgow, have just launched from their building yard a composite gunboat for the British Government. The chaplain of H.M.'s ship Aurora, at present lying in the Firth of Clyde, read the service appointed to be used at the launching of ships of her Majesty's navy. The gunboat, which was named the Wild Swan, is designed for service in the Indian and Chinese seas. She is of 1,020 tons burden, 170 feet in length, by 36 feet in breadth, and is rigged as a three-masted schooner. A sister vessel, to be called the Penguin, is in progress in Messrs. Napier's yard, and will be launched in a few weeks. Among other new vessels ordered by the Admiralty and in course of construction in the Clyde are a 12 gun double screw iron armour-plated ship of 7,323 tons and 6,000-horse power engines, to be named the Nelson, building by Messrs. John Elder and Co., and a sister ship, to be called the Northampton, building by Messrs. Napier and Sons. Both of these vessels are to be delivered by the contractors in or before March, 1877.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £700,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 2nd inst., at the Bank of England. The only particulars given were that tenders on Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay were allotted in full at 1s. 9¼d., showing a rise 5-16d. compared with the last biddings. With reference to the India Council Bills offered for tender on Wednesday, it appears, says the evening Echo of Friday, that one applicant offered to take the whole at 1s. 9¼d. per rupee, and that allotment was made. But it was at once evident that the price was erroneously described, and that what was intended was 1s. 8¼d. Efforts were at once made to get the contract annulled upon this ground, and late on Thursday notice was given at the Bank of England that the allotment was cancelled. Had the tenderer been held to his bargain the loss would have exceeded £30,000, and although very serious inconvenience and some loss had been inflicted upon many persons by the misadventure, there was a general feeling of satisfaction that the authorities had determined to forego their extreme rights. We believe that clerical errors of precisely the same nature have before occurred, but that they were discovered before allotment, and the tenderers were given the opportunity of correction.

THE PRINCE OF WALES'S CHARITABLE GIFTS.—The Duke of Buckingham has forwarded to Mr. Burrows, Officiating President of the Madras Municipality, the sum of Rs. 10,000, to be distributed amongst the various charitable institutions of Madras as the Prince of Wales's donation to those institutions on the occasion of his Royal Highness's visit to that city. His Grace availed himself of the opportunity of expressing to Mr. Burrows, and through him to those gentlemen who so ably assisted him, the thanks of the Government for the exertions made in the successful conduct of the arrangements for his Royal Highness's reception.

THE PRINCE AT THE THEATRE.—Saturday night at English's Theatre, which was to have shown such a grand assembly, turned out a failure, so far as the audience was concerned. The stalls were not half-filled, and the boxes by no means presented the brilliant spectacle which was expected. This was no doubt partly owing to the long prices charged by the management, and partly to the exhausted state of society in general after the past week of continuous excitement. One or two speculators who had purchased a number of stall tickets beforehand, in the hope of doing a good retail business on the night of the performance, were wofully disappointed, and had at the last moment to dispose of their stock at an immense sacrifice. The performance was announced to begin at 9.30 P.M., but as the Prince of Wales had signified his intention of being present, the curtain did not rise until after eleven o'clock, when his Royal Highness arrived, accompanied by his Excellency the Viceroy, the Hon. Miss Baring, and a few others. The first piece was "My Awful Dad," one of Mr. Mathews's own pieces, in which he plays Mr. Adonis Evergreen, and he acted the chief part as well as ever. A great charm in the acting of the celebrated comedian is that by his apparent intimacy and friendliness with all the other actors he subdues their faults, so that their shortcomings not being noticeable, all the company seem to act well. In fact, Mr. Mathews acts for the whole company. Some of the other characters, however, were well sustained on Saturday night. Mr. H. Walton was very good indeed as Prince Gortschoff, and it is a pity the character was not more used. Miss Sallie Turner made an excellent boarding-house keeper (Mrs. Biggs); while Miss Annie Baldwin, as Matilda Wedagain, and Miss Edith Wilson, as Emma Marigold, were charming. The moral of the piece is evidently Mr. Mathews's own life, as the lesson it teaches is—live as long as you can, and be as young as you can while you live. One of the smartest paradoxes in the piece is—"Some men never live at all, others live all their lives." At the conclusion of the piece the manager stated that it was so far advanced into Sunday morning that the second piece would be omitted, and the indulgence of the audience was asked and accorded. The Royal party then left the theatre, the band playing "God Save the Queen."—Indian Daily News, Jan. 7.

THE WOMEN OF AGRA.—And as time passed, the women of Agra shone forth in all the lustre of good deeds, quietly but vigorously prosecuted. There was much work to be done, and they were right willing to do it. Dr. Farquhar represented to Mrs. Charles Raikes that there would be need of the establishment of a Civil Hospital, as the Military Hospital would soon be over-crowded, and he asked her to take the management of it. She consented, and then began to beat up for recruits. There was a little paper published in the Fort, and in this she inserted an advertisement, begging that any women, who wished to take part in this good work, would send in their names. Before evening numbers of women of all ranks had eagerly offered their help. It was necessary, however, that this beautiful regiment of Dorcases should be well organised and disciplined. So Mrs. Raikes appointed a goodly staff of gentlewomen, who superintended the work of the numerous East Indian females who had no other occupation. Besides visiting the hospital and ministering to the wants of the patients, their principal work was that of making up clothing, bedding, bandages, &c., for the sick. The materials were supplied by the Financial Commissioner from the Government stores. It was of necessity that large indents should be made upon Mr. Reade; and he well knew the importance of complying with them. But the Calcutta financiers took another view of the matter, and ignored this item as a public charge, and pronounced it to be one of "personal responsibility." There were others of our English gentlewomen who did their good work in different directions, giving confidence to the desponding by cheerful looks and cheerful words—visiting the sick, teaching the young, and performing other Christian offices. Ominous reports of coming dangers had been set about by men who, brave as lions themselves, took gloomy views of the position and were not slow to express them. "The space before the house occupied by the Deputy-Commissary," writes one who saw everything that was passing, and who has a rare power of putting his reminiscences into expressive words "was one of often resort. Here was Lady Outram discussing the thousand and one rumours of the Fort, always cheerful, lightly treating the adventures of a walk, barefooted for many miles, on escaping from Aligurh, given to chaff the Financial Commissioner with some nonsense about our 'chief politician'—'as unshaken as the wind though busy in raising it'—sometimes borne on her 'taun-jaun,' her son, Frank Outram, walking beside her. It was a delight to the European soldiers, scattered about Armoury-square, to see her, with her serene face always ready with a kind smile and a kind word. . . . In Palace-square was Mrs. (now Lady) Muir with her five children, cheery as a sunbeam, energetic in promoting the employment and welfare of the native Christians, with her neighbour, Mrs. C. B. Thornhill, enlisting other ladies in good work, stirring up subscriptions for the wounded and destitute of the North-Western Provinces. She and those abovementioned, leaders in the social scale, were leaders also in the multiplied tasks of urging the well-disposed to active usefulness, relieving the poor, providing guardianships for waifs and strays of humanity, visiting and supporting schools, soothing vain alarms, repressing the vindictive feeling against the natives of country, promoting charity among all." I am afraid that this feeling of charity was not universal throughout the Fort. The Roman Catholic community kept themselves scrupulously aloof from the rest of the garrison. Extensive quarters had been assigned to them—for they had many nuns and school-girls, priests, and monks, with a bishop at their head. This high ecclesiastical functionary, who lived in another part of the Fort, is said to have given much trouble, as he seemed bent upon making political capital out of the situation. At last it was held to be inexpedient to recognise him any longer as our referee, so Father Lewis was appointed to take his place. It has been written of this community that "their inner life was a sealed book. Their outward demonstration was a long promenade of pale sad faces, headed by two monks, whose jolly visages afforded a curious contrast to the rest." And it is added, "I do not remember that any of the nuns served as sisters of charity in the hospitals; at least I never saw any." But our good Protestant Englishwomen knew little and cared less about differences of creed. Unless some accidental circumstance revealed the fact of the patient's faith, those who ministered to the wants of the sick or wounded in the hospitals had no inkling of the creed of the patient. One poor fellow, whom Mrs. Raikes and others visited in the hospital, was much pleased with the kindness of his lady-visitors, and received them with grateful respect. He was very thankful for any newspapers or light literature that might be offered to him, but he refused to accept any of our religious books and would not listen to the reading of the Bible. One day Mrs. Raikes found his cot empty and saw him kneeling by the bedside of a Roman Catholic comrade to whom a priest was administering extreme unction. This accounted at once for the man's reluctance to listen to the Bible or to read our Protestant books.—Kaye's "Sepoy War," Vol. III.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, January 24; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, January 22; Calcutta, January 21.

THE Indian papers would be newsless but for the accounts of the Prince's doings at Lahor, Jammu, and one or two other places, accounts already in great part forestalled by the telegraph. One reminiscence of the Prince's visit to Calcutta is worth quoting as an illustration of the power of feminine curiosity, and as a fitting commentary on the outcry raised by many natives in Calcutta against the bold Babu who openly introduced the Prince to the assembled ladies of his Zenana:—

> The purdah system was temporarily set aside on the occasion of the Prince's visit. The decorations and illuminations in the streets attracted the curiosity of Native ladies so powerfully as to make them perfectly careless about the concealment of their persons. Night and day one might see through the roads numerous carriages driving with the doors and blinds quite open, containing evidently inmates of the Zenana in a wild state of rapture, excited by the surrounding scene of beauty and grandeur. They were perfectly unmindful as to who saw them, and what was thought of their appearance. It strikes us that a few such occasions of general interest and exultation will do a great deal towards the abolition of the purdah system in this part of the country.

ONE Hindu paper, the Amrita Bazar Patrika, is specially furious with Babu Jagdanand for what it called an "insult" to the whole Hindu community. "We have hitherto preserved the sanctity of our zenanas, even from the encroachment of our powerful rulers. We have lost all, but yet the timid Bengalee would take off the head of the first Englishman who would intrude upon the sanctity of his zenana." Babu Jagdanand however has, in the expectation of "an immense reward," traitorously opened the door of the zenana to the European gaze. But the Hindu nation must revenge itself on this viper of its own nursing. "Hindu tanks might be closed against him. Hindu shopkeepers refuse to deal with him, barbers refuse to shave him, and the dhobie to wash for him." We must hope that the Bengali bark will prove worse than the bite, and that no great harm will befal the object of all this Irish-sounding invective.

IT appears from the Dakhan Herald that the murderer of the Nizam's Persian tutor was a Pathan of the Mahídi sect. The unlucky Maulvi was praying at sunset in the Mecca Masjid, the chief mosque of Haidarabad, "when suddenly the dagger of an assassin was plunged in his loins. Staggering, he fell backwards, when the Pathan drew a sharp knife across his throat until life was extinct. Although several other people were then in the mosque the suddenness of the attack and the coolness with which the deed was done, "so horrified them that they lost all presence of mind, and allowed the miscreant to effect his purpose without let or hindrance. Regaining their self-possession, however, they rushed upon the Pathan, who, after killing his victim, made no attempt to escape; and they cut and hacked him with their swords until he was more dead than alive." At the news of this atrocity the Sunnis rose like one man to demand a general slaughter of the rival sect. It would seem as if the city had narrowly escaped the horrors of a street war. As it was a series of riots broke out during the bakr-id festival, which chanced to fall on the date of the murder, and several lives were reported lost. Haidarabad is almost the only city in India whose streets swarm with men armed to the teeth. Cannot Sir Salar Jung do something to amend this strife-provoking custom?

IT is some relief at any rate to know that strong measures have been taken by Sir Salar Jung to preserve order in the capital of the Dakhan, during the Moharram. In Bombay however the Mohammedans were thought to be so much excited by what had lately taken place at Haidarabad that they might, perhaps, make attempts at retaliation in their own city. But the police were on the alert, and had men specially told off to look after the Jamma Masjid, although no great disturbance was expected.

THERE is little of fresh news from the Survey Party in the Naga Hills. A correspondent of the Pioneer, writing from Pangti, describes the precautions which the Nagas took to surprise poor Captain Butler's party. In the thick high grass skirting the road they cut a network of pathways, in which they could move about unobserved even within six yards of Captain Butler and his men. Now that the Nagas have invited attack by killing the leader of the expedition we presume that they will be made to smart for their treachery; seeing that a great deal still remains to do in the way of surveying before our topographical knowledge of the territories on the North-Eastern Frontier of China and Thibet can be considered complete.

IT was rumoured in Bombay that Khelat is to be made into a British division under charge of Colonel Munro, the Commissioner of Dera Ismail Khan.

A DISTINGUISHED ruffian named Nuruddin Mingal, head of a tribe which has long kept Las Baila in commotion, lately came into collision with the Khan's troops and lost his life. This is only the last of many such disagreeable outbreaks on our frontier. It is only a few months ago since Captain Sandeman was deputed to Khelat to inquire about the stopping of the kafilas through the Bholan Pass, and if possible to get the obstructions removed. He was also to investigate an alternative route, via the Thall Choteali Pass, towards Dera Ghazi Khan to find out the cause of the chronic dissensions between chief and chief and between chiefs and Khan, and to endeavour to arbitrate between them. The local authorities are said to urge more active, and even armed intervention; whilst the Supreme Government considers that it is no more called upon to so interfere in the internal politics of Khelat than of Kabul or Kashgar. Meantime, says the Pioneer, it is satisfactory to remember that the British Government holds in hand a treaty which empowers it to walk in and take possession of the country at any moment.

We learn that a long standing dispute between the Thakur of Palitana and some of his "Bhaiads," broke out lately at Timba into armed resistance to the Darbar troops, when eighteen of the Palitana retainers and four of the Bhaiads were killed.

The Railway Transport Commission was not to meet before the 1st of February. General Sir Charles Reid will be the President, and Major A. LeMesurier, Secretary, and Mr. Jackson and Mr. Carroll will respectively represent the G. I. P. and the B. B. and C. I. Railways. Among the experts who will be examined are Mr. H. P. LeMesurier and Mr. Conder, of the G. I. P. Railway.

The meeting held at Calcutta on January 7, to hear and discuss Professor Williams's project of an Indian Institute at Oxford, gave the Professor an opportunity of explaining his views in that connection, while it brought out the warm interest taken by his audience in the scheme thus submitted to them. Pointing out the great ignorance about India which still exists even in Oxford, "that great centre of intellectual movements," in spite of all the efforts making to remove or lessen that ignorance, the Professor urged that—

Our efforts hitherto have been too sporadic, we want more system. You know the proverb ex Oriente lux. We want to concentrate and intensify the light that comes to us from the East in one place that it may radiate in all directions with greater power. It is for this reason we desire the founding of an Indian Institution somewhere which shall be a great centre of union, intercourse, intercommunion, inquiry and instruction, a great rallying point for all who are engaged in studying India.

For such an institute what place could be fitter, he asked, than Oxford, which would offer fewer snares and better means of instruction and training than London?

It is from Oxford that a correct knowledge of India ought to be diffused; it is there that the rays which come to us from the East ought to be concentrated. India is most deeply interested in this. Depend upon it the greater the knowledge of India in England, the better India will be ruled by Englishmen, the better the natives of India are understood by us, the better shall we govern them.

An Indian Institute at Oxford would aim at spreading a correct knowledge on everything connected with the well-being of the Queen's Indian subjects. It would teach Englishmen at home to realise the great variety of races, creeds, languages, and physical features embraced in the common name of India, and to acknowledge the high mental and moral worth of Indian people. It would also tend, said the Professor, in some measure "to Indianise those who have to govern India, to draw England and India more closely together, to strengthen the ties which bind them to each other, to bridge over the social chasm, which has so long separated the East and the West."

But this striving after "pramá," or correct knowledge, must not be confined to our own countrymen. One object of the proposed Institute will be to encourage the residence of young Indians here in order that they too may gain correct notions about England. "If it may be said that we do not fully understand India, we may fairly reply that India does not fully understand England. If the ideas of Englishmen ought to be more Indianised, the ideas of Indians ought to be more Anglicised." Nor would such a process tend to denationalise those who passed through it.

On the contrary, if they come to Oxford, we shall encourage them to study their own literature, laws, and languages. We shall do all we can to instil into them a right estimate of the greatness and grandeur of their own country, to make them more intensely national, to help them to resolve to do all in their power to ameliorate the condition of their fellow countrymen.

Protesting against that belief in the eternity of ancient usage which Manu was supposed to have enjoined upon his countrymen, the Professor invited his hearers to come themselves or send their sons to England, where they would learn how deep an interest the English people have in the welfare of India. "We shall teach how in our country education and culture are the only castes, the only passport to the best society. We shall teach them how high a tone of public opinion prevails among us; how patriotism, the most disinterested patriotism, prompts us to noble efforts in the service of the State; above all, how high a position the women of England hold, and how bright is the example they set."

Among the few native speakers on this occasion was Babu Keshab Chandra Sen, the well-known Brahmist leader, who proposed a committee to discuss practical details. Sir R. Temple then touched on the need of suitable lodgings for the young students, where they would be free to practise the rites of their own religion; and he hoped that the Natives would join in raising the £20,000 or £30,000 that might be required to start the Institute. On the following day a Committee of English and Native gentlemen headed by Sir R. Temple was appointed to aid in the founding of an Indian Institute at Oxford for the following classes of students:—(1.) Students from India. (2.) English students preparing for an Indian career. (3.) Other students pursuing Indian studies. It was also resolved that in connection with the Institute due provision should be made for the residence of Indian students at Oxford, and for their proper provision; and that the Committee should arrange for the formation of similar Committees at Madras, Bombay, Allahabad, Lahor, and Lucknow, and co-operate with such committees when formed.

Some silly stories concerning the Prince of Wales and his companions in India have lately, it seems, been circulating among those standing reservoirs of gossip, the London Clubs, whence they have found their way into the country papers. One particular story, about a practical joke said to have been played upon a well-known journalist of the Prince's staff on board the Serapis, turned up again the other day in a leading Bombay paper. There it caught the eye of Sir Bartle Frere, who forthwith wrote to the editor from Lucknow in these words:—

Your notice of the story makes me feel it a duty to assure you of my conviction that it is an entire fabrication. I have Captain Glyn's authority for saying that neither he, nor I, nor any one else we can refer to, can recall any circumstance which could have given the least colour of truth to the story, and that he joins me in the assurance that it is from beginning to end utterly without the slightest foundation.—Yours, &c.,

H. B. E. Frere.

He appears also to have privately assured the editor that he never was on board a ship where one and all, young as well as old, so carefully avoided anything which could possibly bring discredit on the Prince's name, and this, not only for the Prince's sake, but from a high sense of what they owed to themselves and their country. This of course is very satisfactory, so far as it goes; but would not the denial have carried more weight, had it come directly from Dr. Russell himself, on whom the practical joke was said to have been played? If it was worth any one's while to contradict the story, that gentleman might surely have been trusted to do the needful in his own behalf.

In his just admiration of the native Indian troops who passed in review before the Prince of Wales at Delhi, the Daily News Special hardly does full justice to their British comrades. The "big-boned Pathans and square-shouldered Sikhs" of the Native Cavalry doubtless make the very best of light horsemen, better than any that Russia could turn out; but we have yet to learn that they can "scale to the full as heavily as our hussars." The stout little Gurkhas again deserve all the praise bestowed upon them, and right well have they just proved their mettle in the Malay campaign. We are glad to hear that Brasyer's and Rattray's Sikhs, now the 15th and 45th N.I., are worthy of their old renown; and the Special feels a just pride in his old friends, the Mazbi Sikhs or 32nd Pioneers. But his comparison of "Tommy Atkins" with the Sepoy of whatever race is a little too much in favour of the latter. The Sepoy, we are told, "is three inches taller than Tommy; his shoulders are broad; he is lean, clean-flanked, sinewy, and long armed; he stalks along with head erect and somewhat thrown back; he has the mien of a stag; he is full of justifiable pride in himself; he swaggers as if he were a conscious Anax andron." This description tallies fairly on the whole with our recollection of the high-caste Purbia Sepoy of other days, who looked more like a prince than a private soldier. Does it equally apply to the average Sepoy, whether "Sikh, Pathan, Panjabi, or Hindustani" of the present day? As for Tommy, he is a sturdy sort of chap enough, it is true; he has a fair pair of shoulders, his girth round the chest is up to the British average. His stature is middling, his carriage is not much to brag of as he trudges stolidly on, looking as if he were thinking about his beef and beer. He does not look to "fancy himself" even a little bit.

All this may be true, but there are one or two points in "Tommy's" favour which ought not to have been overlooked. For all his shortness, the British soldier, unless he has sadly degenerated of late years, will show greater breadth than his taller rival. Place five hundred of each in parallel lines, and our own countrymen will overlap the Sepoys by a good many yards. In point of physical endurance on a long march the Company's Europeans were more than a match for the tall and slender Sepoys on their own ground. Nor is there anything so very "mysterious" in the fact that, during the Mutiny, handfuls of Englishmen beat large numbers of revolted Sepoys. The latter, accustomed to be led by Englishmen, were suddenly left to their own resources, and failed, as their forefathers did in like circumstances, to stand up against the superior pluck, coolness, discipline, and self-reliance of their white antagonists.

In quoting the brave deeds of our trained Sepoys, Mr. Forbes omits such signal feats of arms as Karigám, Laswári, and Sitabaldi, while he gives the 11th, the old 70th N.I., the credit of "storming the key of the position at Gujarat." Now it is, or ought to be, a well-known fact, as stated by Brigadier Penny himself, that the village of Kalra was carried by the 2nd Europeans alone, the 70th on their left coming up after the work was done. Before any of the latter entered the village, the Sikhs had been fairly cleared out.

On the 6th February the Prince of Wales visited the palace at Ambair, the ancient capital of Jaipur. Next day his Royal Highness left for Agra, en route for Bareilly and Naini-Tal, proceeding afterwards on a shooting expedition in Kamaon and the Nepal Terai.

On his return from Jaipur the Prince and his suite went to Moradabad and thence to Naini-Tal, where—says the Times Special—he "arrived just in time to see the snow peaks under the most favourable aspect, rose-hued in the setting sun. It was bitterly cold in the camp at night, and the natives from Southern India suffered severely—indeed, a chorus of coughing was heard all night." Naini-Tal offers, by the way, a better view of the snowy ranges than either Simla or Mussoorie; but next day unluckily the snowy ranges were hidden by a fog. On his way back from Naini-Tal on the 10th, the Prince was met at the foot of the hills by the shooting elephants, and under General Ramsay's direction the country was beaten for tigers, which were reported to be near at hand. One tiger only was seen and shot at, but the distance and the tall grass aided his escape. A leopard however was killed and several deer. On the 11th, at the camp, the party was divided into two, and beat the country across to a place call Peep-up Perow, but as before, there was no luck. On the 12th the camp was again broken up, and the Prince, under General Ramsay's direction, made a wide sweep through a singularly wild district, but no tigers could be found in the most likely places.

According to the Russian Invalid, the Russian troops in Khokan obtained a brilliant victory near Assake on the 30th of January, which created a deep impression in the insurgent camp. Assake is occupied by the Imperial troops. On the 5th of February General Scobeleff granted an interview to Abdurrahman Autobadshi at Hindukishlak, about eight versts from Andijan. At this interview Abdurrahman and several other insurgent chiefs surrendered themselves to the mercy of the Emperor of Russia. General Scobeleff promised Abdurrahman and his family complete security for their persons and property. The town of Andijan has already paid part of the war tax imposed upon it. General Kaufmann has received telegrams from Tashkand containing the following despatch addressed to him by Abdurrahman:—"Conscious of being powerless against the brave and invincible warriors of the White Czar, I have surrendered to General Scobeleff. Trusting in the mercy of the White Czar, I entreat you, as the beneficent protector of my country, not to throw me on the path of destruction, but to give your kind support to the assurance vouchsafed to me by General Scobeleff."

The Queen's Speech at the opening of Parliament on Tuesday last contained one paragraph specially devoted to India, besides two or three which have more or less relation to that part of our empire. The reference to the Prince of Wales and his future subjects was kindly and to the point. Enough and not too much was said about "the hearty affection" with which the Prince has been received by all classes and races in India, and it is fair to infer from this fact that the people of India are happy and loyal under her Majesty's rule. As for the announcement of a Bill to declare the Queen of Great Britain Empress of India, if such a measure can in any way add fresh emphasis to the fact that she has been Empress of India ever since 1858, we may admit that the present is a very good opportunity for repairing an omission of which very few persons in this country seem to have been aware.

The papers laid before Parliament concerning the purchase of the Suez Canal shares afford ample justification of a measure which has lately been exposed to some unfriendly criticism. On the 18th November General Stanton telegraphed from Cairo to Lord Derby, that he had just been informed by Nubar Pasha of offers made by the Société Générale and the Anglo-Egyptian Bank to the effect already notified to him by Lord Derby. General Stanton expressed both to Nubar Pasha and the Khedive his surprise at being kept in ignorance of a transaction which the English Government could hardly view with indifference. The Khedive declared he had no immediate intention to sell the shares, though he was obliged to hypothecate them, and promised General Stanton that the negotiations should be suspended in order that he might communicate with Lord Derby. In the course of the same day Sharif Pasha called, and "renewed the assurance that the Egyptian Government, which had every reason to look upon England as its most sincere friend, would infinitely prefer seeing the Egyptian interests in the Suez Canal transferred to her than to any other country." In reply to General Stanton Lord Derby expressed a hope that if the Khedive should wish to dispose of his shares he would "immediately inform her Majesty's Government, and give them the option of purchase." Lord Derby added, "As it is of great importance to this country that the Viceroy's interest in the Suez Canal should not fall into the hands of a foreign company, I have to instruct you to press for a suspension of negotiations, and to inform the Egyptian Government that her Majesty's Government are disposed to purchase his Highness's shares, if satisfactory terms can be arranged." In a despatch to Lord Lyons, the Foreign Secretary, reporting his interview with M. Gavard, says he informed the latter that "under present circumstances it was impossible to foresee how far, in the future, the control of the Porte could be counted upon as efficacious. That of the Viceroy, therefore, became all the more important. The Khedive, in parting with the shares which he now possessed in the Suez Canal Company, would, in my opinion, surrender an important means of influencing the measures taken by the company and its staff, and as such we could not look upon such a transaction with indifference. We should certainly be opposed to these shares falling into the hands of another French company so as to make the property in the Canal more French than it already was."

On November 25 Lord Derby informed General Stanton that her Majesty's Government were ready to purchase the shares, 177,642 in number, for £4,000,000, and would be prepared to recommend Parliament to sanction the contract. In a despatch to Lord Lyons two days later, Lord Derby says he pointed out to the Marquis of Harcourt that "her Majesty's Government had no wish that the Khedive should sell his shares in the Canal, neither was there on their part the slightest desire to alter the status quo in regard to this undertaking; but, on the other hand, they had no power to prevent his selling, and, as he had decided on so doing, they took the only effectual steps at their disposal to prevent the possibility of the shares falling into hands whose possession of them might not be favourable to the interests of this country; that the suddenness of the whole affair was in no way attributable to her Majesty's Government; if they had delayed other purchasers would have come forward; and they had, therefore, to accept the opportunity as it offered itself, or lose it altogether." The French Ambassador having expressed his fear that if the Khedive should fail to pay his promised £200,000 a year this country would take steps to coerce him, and so make English authority supreme in Egypt, "I assured him," says Lord Derby, "that nothing was further from our thoughts; that her Majesty's Government desired that the passage through Egypt should be free for this country, as for the rest of the world, and desired nothing more."

THE Khedive next proposed to sell the British Government his right to 15 per cent. on the net profits of the Canal. This offer Lord Derby declined with thanks, advising the Khedive to make no further move pending the arrival of Mr. Cave to confer with him on the subject of his finances. The Khedive promised to follow his Lordship's advice. The purchase of the Canal shares by England evoked the ready approval of several European Courts. Lord Odo Russell was charged by Prince Bismarck to express to Lord Derby his congratulations on her Majesty's Government having "done the right thing at the right moment in regard to the Suez Canal." The German Chancellor hailed the measure "as a further and important guarantee of the maintenance of peace in Europe." Like sentiments were expressed by Count Andrassy and Signor Visconti-Venosta on the part of Austria and Italy. It does not appear that any opinion on the subject has been offered by the Russian Government; but its silence tells all the more strongly in Lord Derby's favour.

THE Zanzibar correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette writing on the 13th January, reports that the Egyptians had evacuated Kismayo and the Juba River, but were said to be still anchored off the Dunford River, and their garrison at Brâwa, by the latest accounts, was still there. It was however the general impression that the entire force would shortly be withdrawn. It was understood that Dr. Kirk, her Majesty's Consul-General, was to visit all the places to the north which had been temporarily occupied by the Egyptians. The Sultan and the Arabs of Zanzibar generally are most grateful for the timely intervention of the British Government, and his Highness seems more disposed than ever to meet the views of the English people with regard to slavery to the utmost of his ability. In a private letter which his Highness has written to Dr. Badger, he specially requests that his best thanks may be given to the British Government and people, and to all those who sided with him in the late difficulty. He also invokes the blessing of the Almighty upon her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen and all the Royal Family.

WE notice the death, at the age of eighty, of Mr. Francis Johnson, for thirty-one years Professor of Sanskrit, Telugu, and Bengálí, at the East India Company's College of Haileybury. Mr. Johnson was an eminent linguist and Oriental scholar, with an excellent memory and great natural talent for acquiring languages. At the early age of twenty-four he became a Professor at Haileybury, where he was held in high esteem, not only for his learning and ability, but also for his personal character. He was a conscientious and indefatigable worker, and a successful teacher. In 1847 he published the Hitopadesá, a collection of Sanscrit fables and stories, of which a new edition (dedicated to Professor Monier Williams) appeared in 1864. He also published selections from the Mahabharata, the Megha Duta and the Gulistan. These works were furnished with the most complete and copious vocabularies and other aids to the study of Eastern languages and literature. For many years he was engaged upon a new edition of Richardson's Persian and Arabic Dictionary, which edition was published in 1829. In 1852, after twenty-three years of incessant labour spent in its revision and extension, he published the Dictionary in his own name, under the patronage of the East India Company. This work, which contained no fewer than 30,000 words not to be found in the last edition of Richardson, remains an enduring evidence of Professor Johnson's erudition and untiring industry. In October, 1855, Mr. Johnson resigned his Professorship, in which he was succeeded by Mr. Monier Williams, now Boden Professor of Sanscrit at Oxford, and received a pension which secured him a moderate competence for the rest of his life.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, February 14, 1876.

A GRAVE INDICTMENT.

IF half of the statements contained in a pamphlet which now lies before us be true, a grave responsibility rests on the shoulders of those who supervise the government of our Indian Empire.* While the Indian Government was carrying on the war against famine in 1873-74, stray voices now and then reached our ears, protesting that the war was waged against an imaginary or scarcely visible foe, and denouncing the extravagant outlay caused by gross exaggeration of a trifling danger. Little heed, however, was paid at the time to complaints whose justice, in the face of so much official evidence to the contrary, it seemed impossible to admit. The Indian Government spent its millions amidst general applause, and the noble army of "famine-wallahs" gained full credit, clinched by suitable rewards, for signal services rendered in the cause of humanity. A great disaster had been averted at a heavy cost in money, with a loss of only twenty-four lives in all. It was generally agreed that everybody concerned had done his duty nobly, and that the names of Lord Northbrook and Sir Richard Temple were specially worthy to be held in lasting honour.

At last, however, just as we were forgetting all about the events of 1874, a new attack on the Viceroy's famine policy has been made in a certain "Black Pamphlet," which has already found a large sale in Calcutta, and an English edition of which has just appeared in London, prefaced by a letter to Mr. Fawcett. Its author, a "Bengal Civilian," has the boldness to declare that the so-called famine of 1874 was "an impossibility from the beginning." How it was impossible he proceeds to show in a series of chapters dealing calmly and searchingly with the several grounds of his indictment against Sir Richard Temple, as the chief actor in a farce which resulted in the needless outlay of more than eight millions sterling. Of the 9½ millions spent in famine relief we are assured that 8½ millions were "wasted—absolutely and utterly wasted"—to meet the demands of a governor who mistook a very partial scarcity for a widespread famine; whose estimates were "so extravagant, so unreasonable, that they were stigmatised by even such an alarmist as Sir George Campbell as excessive," and who, scouting the advice of his most experienced officers, flung away large sums of money on contracts "made at eight times the ordinary rates," and insisted on a scale of wages "in some cases ten times as great as the ordinary wages of the country."

It needed no little courage for a member of the sacred Civil Service to bring forward charges so terrible against one so high in place and personal repute as the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal. But in reading further we are constrained to admit the apparent strength of the grounds on which those charges are made. There is no sign of personal feeling. The accuser has set himself to point out a series of lamentable blunders, for each and all of which he finds one man specially responsible. Sir R. Temple was "the adviser officially deputed," early in 1874, to report on the expected famine. "Turn as you will, you always find yourselves confronted by him or something emanating from him. When he did not advise, he ordered. Whatever Sir G. Campbell did is lost sight of in the vastness of Sir Richard Temple's measures." The fact indeed of Sir Richard's prime agency in the relief measures of 1874 is one which nobody can dispute. If the blunders pointed out in the pamphlet were really committed, at his door they must obviously be laid. It is more to the purpose to follow the writer in his attempt to show what and how great those blunders were. Whatever may be thought of his conclusions, they are at least attained by reasoning from a number of facts and figures culled from documents more or less official.

With the aid of such documents he begins by exploding the idea that the famine of 1874 arose from drought. In point of fact at least as much rain fell in Bahar in 1873 as in twelve out of the twenty years from 1855 to 1875, while in the critical months of August, September, and October the rainfall exceeded that of 1867 and the two following years. In Champáran much more rain fell than in the worst parts of the North-Western Provinces. But this is comparatively a small matter. Far more important is the question concerning the true extent of the subsequent scarcity. It appears that a gigantic blunder was made at the outset by those who spread the alarm of impending famine. A partial failure of the autumn rice-crops was magnified into a general failure of the food consumed by the people of Bengal, the bulk of whom live on anything rather than rice. Famine in short was impossible, because "the grains that form the ordinary food of the people of Bahar were in 1873-74 average or bumper crops." Had this fact, for which the pamphleteer adduces ample evidence, been duly recognised, the whole outlay involved in meeting a partial failure of one particular crop consumed by a mere fraction of the people of inland Bengal would have been reduced to less than a million sterling at the outside, if not to the £500,000 estimated by Dr. W. Hunter in his "Famine Aspects of Bengal."

Not only are the rice-tracts of Bahar confined to a very limited area in Tirhut and Bhagalpur, but it appears from the statistics gathered alike by Dr. Hunter and the author of the Black Pamphlet, that rice has always been the dearest food-grain in the Bahar markets, dearer commonly even than wheat, and always much dearer than barley, maize, "murwa," and other grains which form the staple food of the masses. Sir Richard's amazing ignorance of these facts, coupled with his failure to find them out during his frequent gallops about the country, involved, it seems, an utter waste of more than four millions expended on rice-allotments to districts fairly provided with other and cheaper kinds of food. It is certainly a curious fact that the Collector of Gaya, writing on the 24th January, 1874, had "never known the cattle of this district to be in such good case as they are at present." At a later period the rabi or cold-weather crops in Bahar were reported almost everywhere good, and in some places plentiful, and a relief-officer riding about Sáran could find no traces of "general distress or extreme scarcity of food." But the mischief caused by Sir R. Temple's ignorance was enhanced by his recklessness in estimating the cost of relief works and carriage of supplies. He is accused, with apparent justice, of offering wages at least three times as high as the price of ordinary labour, and thus drawing to the relief works crowds of people who could have earned a fair living elsewhere. While Sir John Strachey was paying his adult male labourers in Gorakhpur and Basti from one anna to one and a-half a day, Sir Richard was giving twice and thrice as much to the labourers in Bahar, so that each man and woman, who usually earned between them 2½ annas or 3¾d. a day, were now receiving from 10½d. to 1s. 1½d. for work of the lightest description. The result of course was that by the end of June 1874, when no labourers remained on the works in Basti, the numbers in Bahar had risen to more than 1½ million; while the total waste on relief works in Bengal may be reckoned at £1,173,250, out of £1,280,000 spent in all.

A like comparison between the ordinary rates for carriage and those fixed by Sir Richard Temple results, according to the pamphleteer, in proving an actual waste of nearly 2½ millions on transport alone. Instead of 8 annas or a shilling a day for cart hire, Sir Richard often paid as much as 4 rupees and never less than two rupees a day. Half of the freight of all grain sent by rail was also paid by Government, and a large transport train, including steamers sent out from home too late to be of any use, was organised at great cost after the contractors had made their own arrangements for meeting all demands. What more need be said here? That this terrible indictment is altogether true, we should be very loath to admit; but that he who has framed it has not spoken without some show of reason and likelihood we cannot deny. In justice alike to himself and the Indian Government some inquiry ought at once to be made into a matter involving the gravest issues for all concerned.

GENERAL SIR H. G. A. TAYLOR, G.C.B.

It may interest many of our friends to read in somewhat greater detail than appears under the Military Intelligence in the Times, a record of the services of the late Gen. Sir H. G. A. Taylor, G.C.B., the venerable and highly esteemed general officer, whose death so lately occurred.

This veteran officer, the senior general in her Majesty's Army, expired at his residence in Clarendon-place, Hyde-park Gardens, on the 9th of February, in the ninety-third year of his age. He was born in October, 1783; his commission as cadet dated from season 1798, and he arrived at Madras on the 30th of July, 1799. He joined the 10th Regiment Madras Native Infantry as Lieutenant, at Ganjam, early in the year 1800. In 1801-2 Lieutenant Taylor was employed in command of a detachment of two companies of his Regiment in the Goomsoor country against the rebel Rajahs for a period of six months. In 1802 he marched with his Regiment from the Ganjam district to the banks of the Nerbudda, to join the grand army assembled under the command of General Stuart, and shortly after his arrival in camp was despatched with his Regiment to join the army under Sir Arthur Wellesley.

Lieut. Taylor arrived at the head-quarters of General Wellesley's Force in time to be present at the Battle of Assai, on September 23, 1803, when he was severely wounded in the arm, and slightly in the leg. He was sufficiently recovered to be again present with his regiment at the Battle of Argaum on November 29, 1803, and at the siege and storm of the Fortress of Gawilghar in December following. For these three actions he received a medal and three clasps.

In 1804 Lieutenant Taylor was appointed adjutant of his regiment, and returned with it from Camp to Chitaldrug, in Mysor, where the regiment remained until the early part of 1807. In that year the 10th Regiment formed part of the Haidrabad Subsidiary Force, and proceeded to the Frontier near Jaulnah on field service. In the year 1809 Captain Taylor joined the Army under the command of Sir Barry Close, and was appointed Brigade Major to the 3rd Brigade, and was also selected by that distinguished officer for the post of Deputy Adjutant-General to a subsidiary force in process of formation for the occupation of Nagpore. This project was not carried out, however, for political reasons.

In 1810 Captain Taylor was appointed Deputy Adjutant-General of the Haidarabad Subsidiary Force, and continued in that situation for a short time: after which, in the same year, he became Superintendent of Bazaars, and was subsequently appointed to the Commissariat, in which he served in the field until 1817, having been nearly ten years on active field service against the Pindarries, under Sir John Doveton and other commanders. He was promoted to Major in 1817, and continued in the Commissariat until January, 1822, when he proceeded to England on furlough for the benefit of his health.

In September, 1825, he returned to Madras as Lieutenant-Colonel, and was almost immediately appointed to act as Town Major by Sir Thomas Munro. After the death of that distinguished Governor Colonel Taylor continued to hold the appointment of Town Major under the Right Hon. S. R. Lushington until October, 1828, when, having been promoted to the rank of Colonel, he was appointed to the command of the Brigade and Fortress of Vellore, and had temporary charge of the Centre Division of the Madras Army during the absence of Major-General M'Dowall.

In the year 1832, the Northern Sirkars being in a very disturbed state, Colonel Taylor was selected by Mr. Lushington, on the recommendation of the Commander-in-Chief, to proceed immediately to take up the command of the Northern Division of the Army, and was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General.

General Taylor served the full period of five years in command of that Division, and was actively employed during the whole of that time in suppressing rebellions in the Vizagapatam, Kimmedy, and Ganjam districts, with a force consisting at different periods of more than fifteen regiments. For the good service thus rendered he received the thanks in General Orders of the Madras Government on five different occasions, and on relinquishing the command, at the expiration of his period of service, he again received the thanks of the Governor and Commander-in-Chief, and was recommended to the favourable notice of the Court of Directors.

After a distinguished career of nearly forty years, General Taylor left Madras in November, 1837, and arrived home in February, 1838. He was nominated a Companion of the Bath in the following year, a Knight Commander in 1862, and a Knight Grand Cross of the Bath in 1873.

General Taylor gave no less than six sons to the Indian services, besides numerous nephews and other relations. Of his three surviving sons, Mr. George Noble Taylor, the eldest, entered the Madras Civil Service in 1840, and retired in 1870, when a member of the Council of the Governor General. Captain Ralph Taylor, well known in Mysor and Kurg, resigned the service some years ago when a Deputy Superintendent of the Mysor Commission; and Lieut. Colonel Clarence Comyn Taylor, of the Bengal Staff Corps, who was wounded in the Mutiny at Allahabad, closed his Indian career as Aide-de-Camp to the late Lord Mayo.

Of those who are gone numerous friends will remember with regret Colonel Charles Philip Taylor, who was for many years Paymaster at Bangalor, and afterwards at Madras, and who died there so suddenly in 1868: and some few also will call to mind "that gallant young officer," quoting from the General's despatch, "Lieutenant James Marriott Taylor, 9th Madras Native Infantry, doing duty with H.M.'s 51st Light Infantry, who fell mortally wounded in an attack upon the enemy's position during the last Burmese War in 1854." "In this attack," says a writer in the United Service Magazine of June, 1874, "which ended in a complete and glorious success, the chief honours were borne off by Lieutenant Taylor, who led the men of the 51st, and fell a sacrifice to his gallantry, and Ensign Wolseley (now Sir Garnet Wolseley) of H.M.'s 80th Regiment, who was also struck down, and nearly shared a similar fate.

Sir Henry Taylor's only daughter is the widow of the late Mr. W. A. Arbuthnot, member of the Indian Council, who died in December, 1874.

Of several members of the family still doing good service in India, may be mentioned the General's nephews, Capt. J. H. Taylor, Master Attendant of Madras; Captain A. D. Taylor, late of the Indian Navy, and now Superintendent of the Marine Survey of India; and Colonel F. C. Taylor, R.E., Consulting Engineer for Railways to the Government of Bengal.

In the career of each and all of his relations and descendants, and, in fact, in all matters relating to India, Sir Henry Taylor continued to take the liveliest interest to the day of his death. He much regretted the change in the organisation of the Indian Army, and could never be brought to appreciate the supposed advantages of the Staff Corps.

We understand that he left with his family a brief narrative of his career, written with his own hand in the early part of 1875, when in his ninety-second year, which reads like a page of by-gone history, and would be interesting to many to see in print.

General Taylor is a memorable instance of life being lengthened by its burdens being easily borne. He will ever remain in the memory of those who knew him as a kind and valued friend, and he has left behind him an honoured name that his children may be proud of bearing.

Notices of Books.

A Sanskrit Handbook for the Fireside. By Elihu Burritt. London: Longmans, Green and Co. 1876.

Hâfiz of Shîrâz. Selections from his Works, Translated by Herman Bicknell. London: Trübner and Co. 1875.

These two books, though dissimilar in matter and manner, are yet intimately associated, insomuch as they both spring from the same spirit—the desire of popularising, as far as may be, Oriental literature. The work of the famous linguist, Elihu Burritt, is an attempt to bring the Sanskrit language within the reach of ordinary men and women. This the author seeks to do by giving the salient features of the language, especially such as are brought into play in the reading exercises at the end of the book. These latter consist of excerpts from a translation of the Testament, the author seeming to think that it is better, in the first place, to deal with a book the spirit of which is familiar to every learner. The grammar portion is necessarily brief and imperfect; but the analysis of the exercises is, unfortunately for Mr. Burritt, simple and very detailed. These minute explanations prove incontestably that Mr. Burritt has attempted a task beyond his strength. Sanskrit is to him an unknown tongue. The errors are thick and threefold, and render his book completely valueless. Neither can we see the necessity for any new book of similar design, as Professor Monier Williams, ten years ago, published a thoroughly good elementary work on the subject, called the "Sanskrit Manual." This Manual is accurate and useful, and so is, also, Dr. Ballantyne's First Lessons in Sanskrit. The ground being thus fully occupied by these eminent scholars, Mr. Burritt has attempted and failed in an unnecessary task.

The foregoing book, by attempting to simplify a difficult subject, endeavours to bring a knowledge of Oriental literature within the reach of a large circle of readers; and Mr. Bicknell, by his elegant translation of the works of Hâfiz, will certainly aid the same cause. This latter work is a splendid monument to the genius of the great poet whose verses it contains. The magnificence with which the work has been brought out shows the love which Mr. Bicknell felt for his subject. The translation is linear, and gives with considerable ingenuity the form as well as the meaning of the Persian verse, retaining as many as possible of the compound words, alliterations and antitheses, which distinguish the original. Notwithstanding this close adhesion to the Persian, Mr. Bicknell's translation reads without constraint; and will open the beauties of Hâfiz to large numbers who have hitherto felt no interest in Oriental subjects. The importance of this handsome volume it is difficult to overrate, because, at the very time when public attention is markedly directed towards the East, it presents, in the most attractive form, the charming lyrics of the Prince of Persia's poets, and these, it may confidently be hoped, will keep alive the spirit of inquiry now manifested.

CIVIL.—It is said that the Hon. Ashley Eden, on being relieved of his special duty in connection with the commission of inquiry into the grievances of the junior civil servants, intends to proceed to England on furlough. We learn that Mr. F. de H. Larpent, who was in charge of the famine accounts, which have just been closed, has been specially recommended for departmental promotion, in recognition, presumably, of his services in connection with that special duty.—Indian Daily News.

THE SALT DUTIES.

The Indian Daily News holds that that is doubtless a lamentable necessity which compels any Government to tax a necessary of life. In India especially, the medical evidence as to the use of salt imparts to the past action of the Government, in regard to the salt duty, a peculiarly cruel complexion. The Indian revenues, however, are in the transition stage; and just because all government would come to a dead lock, if all objectionable taxation were at once removed, and because moderate oppression is preferable to anarchy, rational public opinion must be satisfied if it sees the Government moving steadily in the direction of improvement. The movements of the Indian Government in the pursuit of improvement have, it must be acknowledged, been rather slow in some directions—painfully so in the direction of the salt duty. The evidence that has been collected on the subject of the incidence of this duty justifies the assumption that the limit of taxation, which unites the maximum of consumption with the minimum of oppression, has not yet been struck. And how could it be, while the Government makes arbitrary differences in the rates of taxation in different portions of the country? That the cost of a necessary of life should, in consequence of the duty on it, be raised from nine to twelve hundred per cent. in any province is simply monstrous. If the salt duty cannot be abolished for the simple, and for the present sufficient, reason that the Government would become insolvent without it, the Government is at least clearly bound so to moderate what has been found on inquiry to be a prohibitive duty, that the reduction in the selling rates will promote additional consumption. The medical testimony in favour of this course is overwhelming. Nor can any one pretend ignorance of the truism that the inducements to run the risk of smuggling would be most effectually removed by a reduction in duty. If, then, a gradual equalisation of duty, the suppression of smuggling, and a generally-enhanced consumption would lead to a fair compensation in revenue for any sacrifice which the Treasury may intelligently make, it is, in our judgment, to be regretted that the statesmanship of the Treasury is not equal to that sacrifice.

ADMINISTRATIVE REFORM.

The Indian Daily News suggests that if the territorial limits of districts were re-adjusted, the highest district officer in Bengal might be of much the same standing as a commissioner at present, while the lowest might go down to the grade of a present joint-magistrate—and at the same time a vast saving might be effected, which might be expended on the employment of an efficient subordinate agency. If the territorial limits of districts were re-adjusted, as we have sometimes before proposed, such a graded service of district officers could be appropriately arranged in suitable districts. While on the one side there would be nothing shocking in the elevation of a magistrate on Rs. 3,000 a month to a seat in the provincial council on Rs. 4,000 a month, on the other there would be nothing out of the way in entrusting a small district to a young magistrate on Rs. 800 or Rs. 900 a month. If these arrangements were so made as not to increase the total number of districts, and not to exceed the total present allotment on magisterial salaries, the whole of the salaries of the commissioner and some of the salaries of junior civilians would be saved, and could be devoted to the employment of trustworthy uncovenanted officials on salaries varying from Rs. 200 to Rs. 500 or Rs. 700 a month. The advantages to be derived from this reconstruction cannot be exhaustively described at the end of a newspaper article; but it may be briefly said that the Government would obtain a very large addition to the number of its mofussil officials. Now, no one denies that a competition-wallah may be a more highly crammed official than an uncovenanted officer of the ordinary type. But no one has any reason to say that he is more of a gentleman. And if the uncovenanted officials of the subordinate executive generally fulfil much the same duties as junior civilians, and fulfil them equally well, the superior cram of the competition-wallah becomes an obvious superfluity under such a scheme of redistribution as we are now considering. It would clearly be an advantage to the country to have ten uncovenanted officers scattered over a district in which there may now be only two or three, and these stationed at head-quarters. If ten good subordinate officials, whether called police assistants, or assistant commissioners, were posted all over a district of the average present size of a district, and the district officer travelled through his charge for the best part of the year, carefully examining the work of his subordinates, the country would probably be better governed than it can now be said to be, and at any rate it would have made an end of the reproach of being under-governed. Almost every large plan of any kind that has been contemplated in recent years has failed, simply because we have not dared trust our native underlings to carry it out; but with trustworthy officers so scattered over the interior that oppression would be ridden down by them in a few years, even a poll-tax, which would yield an enormous revenue, would become a feasible project in a country in which an income-tax is now an impossibility, chiefly because we dare not trust any one to collect it, and have no guarantee that the theoretical exemptions of the law will be respected in practice.

THE PROPOSED OXFORD INSTITUTE.

The Englishman remarks, the proposal of Professor Monier Williams, for the establishment of an Indian Institute at Oxford, has its fullest sympathy because it believes that institutions of the kind described by him, wherever appropriately established, are calculated to be most useful both to English students of India and Indian students in England, and be cause it looks upon Oxford as a very appropriate place for the purpose. At the same time, we must admit that we cannot sympathise in all the learned Professor said on the subject at the Dalhousie Institute. In spite of the terrible temptations of the great capital on which he lays so much stress, we cannot, for instance, agree with him, that such an Institute should be established in Oxford rather than in London. For we are strongly of opinion that if natives of India are to reap the fullest advantages of a visit to England, it is only by residing, for some time at least, in London, that this can be accomplished. It is hardly in a state of tutelage, or in the seclusion of what is after all a country town, that that cosmopolitan tone, and that knowledge of European life in which the natives of India are so deficient, are to be acquired; while, as to the very temptations of which Professor Williams speaks, those who know much of native life will be inclined to smile at his fears. The immorality of London is, no doubt carried on after a different style, but, in point of depravity, we doubt whether it surpasses that of which young Bengal has to run the gauntlet in Calcutta. The most formidable risk to which the native of India is specially exposed in London is that of being defrauded and led into pecuniary extravagancies and consequent embarrassment by designing people. But to guard him against this risk, it is surely not necessary to keep him away from London. By all means let there be an Indian Institute in Oxford, which after the capital is perhaps the best place for the purpose, and which is in some special points, no doubt, an even better place than the capital itself; but let there be an Institute in London too. We know of no reason why there should not be both. But if the one were inconsistent with the other, we should prefer London to Oxford. Professor Monier Williams disclaims all intention of antagonism to other schemes, and no doubt sincerely. But some of his expressions indicate an ambition which is not altogether consistent with the disclaimer. "You know," he says, "the proverb ex Oriente lux. We want to concentrate and intensify the light in one place. It is for this reason that we desire to found an Indian Institute somewhere, which shall be a great centre of union, intercourse, inquiry, and instruction—a great rallying point for all who are engaged in studying India." The speaker seems to have been somewhat carried away by his metaphor. Whatever advantage there may be in the concentration of physical light in one place, there can be none that we know of in such a concentration of intellectual light, if, indeed, the metaphor has any meaning at all. We want the knowledge of India to be as widespread in England as possible, and for this purpose the agencies for its diffusion should be as numerous as possible. To concentrate them in one place would be to deprive of their advantage all those who could not have recourse to that place, and to inflict unnecessary inconvenience on many of those who might have recourse to it. From other parts of Professor Williams's speech we gather that he does not wish to procure for Oxford a monopoly in Indian instruction, and as an independent scheme his proposal has our cordial support. We cannot leave the subject without noticing Bishop Milman's remark that the only weak point in the scheme is that the Christian religion is not associated with it. Seeing that the scheme is intended for persons of all religions, that its association with the Christian religion would render it unacceptable to a large portion of those for whom it is intended, and that religious instruction is not one of the objects it pretends to provide for, we should consider it a very weak point if it were associated with the Christian religion.

MR. HUME, Secretary to Government, in the Department of Revenue, Agriculture, and Commerce, goes on leave in the spring, and Mr. G. Batten will probably officiate for him.

DR. MONIER WILLIAMS AT CALCUTTA.—The meeting convened at the Dalhousie Institute on Friday, Jan. 7, in connection with Professor Monier Williams's mission to inaugurate an Institute at Oxford, to prepare natives of India for passing examinations in Sanskrit, in view to future admissions into the Indian Civil Service. was fairly attended, his Honour the Lieutenant Governor, his Lordship the Bishop, Mr. Eastwick, the Boden Professor, and several other gentlemen, native and European, addressing those present. The Professor was introduced by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, and gave a general explanation of the objects of his visit, after which several speakers addressed the meeting; several suggestions were made, and replies elicited. Nothing very definite was placed before the meeting; but a committee was nominated, who met the next afternoon and passed resolutions in favour of the project.

THE PRINCE AT LAHOR.

Jan. 19.—There was a ball last night. The chief event to-day was the opening of the Soldiers' Industrial Exhibition for 1875-76 by the Prince of Wales. The Exhibition was held in the Army Presbyterian Church, and all the goods exhibited were the handiwork of privates and non-commissioned officers of the station, the prizes being of money offered by the Government, and the men reaping the benefit of the sale of their productions. The advantages of cultivating industry, science and art amongst soldiers cannot be too highly estimated, if for nothing else, as the Prince said, than to enable the men to increase their means of subsistence after their term of service in the army has expired. It is a fact of great credit to the British soldier, and of no little significance in itself, that Private J. Slight, of the 40th Fusiliers, is a botanist, and showed an excellent album of mosses collected with his own hands; and that Privates W. Hollins and Turvey, of the 1-11th and 5th Fusiliers, respectively, catch, kill and stuff rare serpents, animals, birds and butterflies. J. H. Smith, another private, makes all kinds of inks, while there were also some excellent specimens of cabinet-making and upholstery, especially some gems of camp or deck chairs, for the production of which Private W. Pearless obtained and deserved the highest prize. A neat little cabinet or jewelled case by Private Grant has been bought by Mr. Money, of the Bengal Lancers, and is intended as a present for the Prince of Wales. An ingenious iron safe, in which a bell rings when anybody except the owner tries to open it, speaks for itself, and has been bought by Lord Ossulston from the maker, Private Roland, of the 2-60th Rifles. There were also some excellent drawings by Private Schongel, of the 10th Hussars, and by Private Villiers, of the 2-19th; as well as a profusion of wood carving' quilts, rugs, horse-shoes, iron bedsteads, dolls, curtains, printing, and a host of other things, all speaking well for the way in which the soldiers on the Lahore station spend their leisure moments.

The road en route to the Exhibition at Meean Meer was lined by the following troops:—A F Royal Horse Artillery; D-8 Royal Artillery; a Squadron of the 4th Hussars; the 1st Bengal Cavalry in their light gold-coloured coats; the 2-1 Royal Scots; the 92nd Highlanders; the 7th Native Infantry; the 12th Khola Gilzies; and the 25th Native Infantry; so that there were three regiments of Native Infantry, one of Native Cavalry, two regiments of British Infantry, and a squadron of British Cavalry. There was no cheering on the way, because there was no one to cheer, and although the room was well filled with ladies and soldiers, the Prince had ascended the dais and taken his stand under a rich crimson velvet canopy before he was recognised. The bulk of the audience, however, was composed of soldiers' wives, daughters and children, and one "little dear of pigmy size" had so little respect for the presence of royalty that it called loudly for "mamma," and would not be comforted by even the "whisht dearie" of its mother.—Times of India Correspondent.

COPPER COINAGE.—With a view, perhaps, to facilitate payments in fractional parts of a pice, and thereby square up public accounts, instructions, we hear, have been issued to the Mint authorities to coin a lakh or thereabouts of small copper pies for the Government of Bengal.

THE NEW ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.—It seems that the idea of Zoological Gardens for Calcutta is a very favourite one, judging from the subscriptions that have been promised. The success of the new institution may be said to be assured. Already the subscriptions amount to Rs. 170,000; and this sum will, doubtless, be considerably increased.

THE MINT.—It is said that Colonel H. Hyde, R.E., the Mint-Master of Calcutta, will make over charge of his office to his successor, Lieutenant-Colonel Tennant, R.E., on the 15th inst., and will probably avail himself of his leave, and proceed home by the beginning of next month, if not, earlier.—Indian Daily News, Jan. 14.

SECRETARIAT.—It is said that Mr. C. P. L. Macaulay, C.S., who is shortly to be relieved of the special duty of preparing the Bengal Administration Report, on which he was recently employed, is to be appointed Officiating Under-Secretary to the Government of Bengal in the place of Mr. J. Crawfurd, C.S., who is talked of as likely to succeed Mr. H. L. Johnson, Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Assam, proceeding on furlough. The rumour regarding Mr. H. S. Beadon, who is the permanent Under-Secretary, but at present employed in the Survey Department, returning to the Bengal Office, does not appear to be well founded, inasmuch as the salary of that officer in the Survey Department is greater than that of his substantive appointment in the Bengal Secretariat.

SIR H. NORMAN.—It appears to be settled that Sir Henry Norman is to remain in his present office for another year. It is to be wished that all men were equally conscientious in office as Sir Henry; there would be far less cause of complaint.

JUDICIAL.—The Hon. Mr. Justice Jackson has, we hear, resolved on retiring from the High Court Bench. This is an announcement which we feel sure will be received with universal regret. Added to the powers of a sound lawyer, the hon. gentleman possesses many other solid recommendations to esteem which will cause him to be much missed in social circles. We shall probably not err in regarding the recent bereavement in the loss of his son as the chief cause of Mr. Jackson's retirement. He will, it is said, be succeeded in the High Court by Mr. H. B. Lawford, at present the Officiating Judge of Hooghly. Mr. H. T. Prinsep will revert to his old appointment as Judge of Hooghly.—Indian Daily News.

MR. ALLAN HUME.—We understand that Mr. Allan Hume, the Secretary to Government in the Agricultural and Revenue Department, is about to proceed on furlough. It is not yet certain who will be his successor, but probably either Mr. Howell, of the Home Department, or Mr. Geoghegan, will be placed in the officiating appointment. We believe we are correct in saying that Mr. Hume, who, previous to his present incumbency, filled appointments in which he was very actively employed, has not found the sedentary and monotonous life entailed upon him by his position in the Agricultural Department as agreeable, or as conducive to his health, as he could wish.

COLONEL OSBORNE.—It is rumoured that Colonel A. E. Osborne, of the Staff Corps, the Examiner of the Pay Department, intends to retire in April next, under the new retiring scheme for 1876, which has already been promulgated. Speculations have in consequence been rife as to who is to succeed him. It is said in certain quarters that Colonel H. Cockburn, Staff Corps, the Presidency Paymaster, is to be the First Examiner of the Pay Department in his place; but the salary of the two officers—viz., the Pay Examiner and the Paymaster—being equal, it is doubtful whether the present Paymaster will accept the post if offered. In the event of his declining it one of the Examiners from the sister presidencies is likely to be transferred to Bengal.

RETIREMENT OF MR. JUSTICE JACKSON.—The Hon. Mr. Justice Jackson has, the India Daily News hears, resolved on retiring from the High Court Bench. This is an announcement which will be received with universal regret. Added to the powers of a sound lawyer, the hon. gentleman possesses many other solid recommendations to esteem which will cause him to be much missed in social circles. We shall probably not err in regarding the recent bereavment in the loss of his son as the chief cause of Mr. Jackson's retirement. He will, it is said, be succeeded in the High Court by Mr. H. B. Lawford, at present the Officiating Judge of Hooghly. Mr. H. P. Prinsep will revert to his old appointment as judge of Hooghly.

MARINE.—We learn that Captain A. Baker, Officiating Superintendent of the Government Dockyard, and Officiating Master Attendant, Calcutta, intends shortly to proceed on two years' furlough, and that he has already submitted his application to Government. Various speculations are rife as to who is to succeed him. Rumour, however, has it that Captain E. J. Butler, Officiating Deputy Master Attendant, is to remain in charge of the Dockyard, and that Captain F. Warden, I.N., First Assistant to the Master Attendant, is likely to act as Master Attendant, and Captain R. B. Yates, as his deputy. Another report is that on the departure of Captain Baker on furlough, Captain J. Bythesea, R.N.V.C., Consulting Naval Officer to the Government of India, is to have a locale in the Master Attendant's Office, and to exercise supervision over both the Dockyard and Master Attendant's Department, in addition to his substantive duties as Consulting Naval Officer. It is almost time the gallant captain did something.—Indian Daily News.

THE COMMITTEE ON RAILWAY EXPERIMENTS.—The following are the members of the Committee which assembled at Delhi, on the 20th of January, to prosecute experiments in the embarkation and disembarkation of troops, horses, and guns, on to and from railway trains:—President: Lieut.-Gen. Sir Charles Reid, K.C.B.. Military Members: Colonel A. D. Dickens, C.B., Deputy Commissary General; Major C. Hunter, R.A., Commissary of Ordnance. Railway Members: Lieut.-Colonel F. S. Taylor, R.E., Consulting Engineer for Guaranteed Railways, Calcutta; Lieut.-Colonel C. Pollard, R.E., Consulting Engineer for Guaranteed Railways, Lahore; Major R. de Bourbel, R.E., Consulting Engineer for Guaranteed Railways, Lucknow; Major C. J. Smith, R.E., Deputy Consulting Engineer for Railways, Madras; Mr. H. E. Church, Traffic Manager, Madras Railway; Mr. Barton Wright, Locomotive Superintendent, Madras Railway; Mr. E. G. Sherwood, Locomotive Superintendent, South Indian Railway; Mr. S. Jackson, Locomotive Superintendent G.I.P. Railway; Mr. E. B. Carroll, Locomotive Superintendent, B.B. and C.I. Railway; Mr. Sandiford, Locomotive Superintendent, S.P. and D. Railway; Mr. J. G. Cooke, Locomotive Superintendent, O. and R. Railway; Mr. R. W. Pearce, Carriage and Waggon Superintendent, E.I. Railway; Mr. R. Bocquet, Officiating Agent, S.P. and D. Railway; Captain K. C. Pye, R.E., Manager Rajpootana State Railway; Mr. J. Collet, Engineer-in-chief, Western Rajpootana Railway. Secretary: Major A. LeMesurier, R.E., Deputy Consulting Engineer for Guaranteed Railways, Sind.

SIR STUART HOGG.—Mr., now Sir, Stuart Hogg is the fourth son of the Right Hon. Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., and was born in Calcutta, in 1833. He was educated at Eton and Haileybury, and, after passing for the Indian Civil Service, landed in this country in 1853. His first appointment was that of Assistant Commissioner of Jallandhar, in the Punjab. When the Mutiny of 1857 broke out, Mr. Hogg, though at that time occupying only a subordinate post, was one of the civil officers sent with the troops in pursuit of the insurgents on their way to Delhi, and he was honourably mentioned in the despatches of his superior officers, as well as by Lord Lawrence, for his exertions on that occasion, and his conduct throughout that trying period. After the Mutiny Mr. Hogg was promoted to the charge of the district of Ludhiana, which he held for about a year, and, on the re-occupation of Oudh by the British Government, was sent to reorganise one of the unsettled districts in the heart of the Province. In 1860 Mr. Hogg proceeded on a year's leave to England, and on his return to India, in the following year, was offered an appointment in Lower Bengal, the Bengal Government being then in want of civil officers for some of the higher posts. Mr. Hogg was shortly afterwards appointed Magistrate and Collector of Bardwan, where he remained till 1866, when he was offered his present post as Chairman of the Justices and Commissioner of Police, by Sir Cecil Beadon, then Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. During the Orissa famine months, when Calcutta was invaded by thousands of homeless and starving people, Mr. Hogg's energetic action in providing these multidues with work and relief, as well as shelter in temporary camps, obtained him the cordial thanks of the Government. Mr. Hogg had the good fortune to hold his present appointment during the visit of his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh in 1869, and the arrangements he made on that occasion in connection with the reception of H.R.H. met with the warm approval of Government, and the thanks of H.R.H. On the present occasion it has again fallen to Mr. Hogg's lot to bear a large share of the anxiety and responsibility connected with the visit to this city of a Royal Prince, and to carry out the police arrangements, and many of the other details relating to the reception of the illustrious visitor. This onerous task he has discharged with his usual energy, and with a degree of success which has given the greatest satisfaction to his Royal Highness and the Government. We congratulate Sir Stuart Hogg on the distinction he has so well earned.—Englishman.

MR. CHARLES MATHEWS'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.—The engagement of Mr. C. Mathews concluded with a farewell benefit, at which he made one of those happy farewell speeches of his in the delivery of which "none but himself can be his parallel." The closing sentences are very characteristic:—"Indeed, our sojourn here has been so short and so full of delightful and novel excitement that on our return home it will appear like a pleasant dream, and we shall scarcely be able to realise it. Brief though it has been, it has been rendered most agreeable by the extreme kindness and attention we have received. I was a little disappointed at first with the 'City of Palaces,' expecting to see nothing but marble studded with precious stones—disappointed also at the lack of elephants. I have only seen two since I have been in Calcutta—two little fellows about the size of polo ponies, who were invited to meet the Prince of Wales on his first arrival at Government House, but who grew so very sleepy that they were sent home and put to bed before his Royal Highness made his appearance. I am told that elephants are not allowed in the city for fear of their frightening the horses; but, from what I have seen of the native cattle in the streets, I should say they were more likely to frighten the elephants. The grand parade of seven hundred and fifty at Bankipore, with their painted foreheads, war trappings, and gorgeous howdahs, must have been a magnificent sight, and we are promised an introduction to a number of splendid specimens to-morrow at Barrackpore. I hope we shall not be disappointed. I announced my intention of making my re-entry into London on one of the largest I could obtain, but I fear, after all, I shall have to drive up in a native bullock barouche—a 'byle garee' I believe it is called. It is true, I might present myself in a palanquin, as a more dignified conveyance; but I should be afraid of being mistaken for a patient on his way to the hospital, for such was my impression on first beholding the funereal-looking 'palki'—I believe 'palki' is the correct name. My Hindustani is not very pure, I am aware. I have only mastered a few useful phrases, such as 'Raho,' 'Jaldi jao,' 'Ag lao,' and 'Pani lao,' and am not quite sure that I know what they really mean. Some words, though, I must confess are significant enough. For instance, husbands are designated by the term 'kussum'—a term, I fear, sometimes used by Men Sahibs without being aware that they are speaking Hindustani. But though disappointed at the first sight of the 'City of Palaces,' I soon found, on driving among its innumerable palatial villas and visiting their elegant and costly interiors, that the epithet was well deserved and quite appropriate; and if I may be permitted to add another title I would proclaim it the 'City of Politeness and Hospitality.' Allow me thank you, ladies and gentlemen, for the support you have given me, and for the many kind attentions received by myself and my 'Mem Sahib,' and to assure you, though far away, that we shall never forget them."

STATION TALK.

NORTH ARCOT, Jan. 12.—I am sorry to say that the rain still holds off, although several times the blue above was hid by dense clouds, which, however, soon disappeared. The thermometer has risen regularly, if not rapidly, up to eighty-five deg. at noon in the shade, and, notwithstanding the favourable presence of a breeze, the nights are becoming sensibly closer, and blankets are being laid aside for lighter covering. Pasturage for cattle is becoming very scanty, and the result is that one meets many ill-conditioned beasts of all kinds. Cattle disease is spreading, and many head have fallen victims to it, and unless a change quickly ensues the losses of the grazier are likely to be heavy. Prices are already rising, and will soon be up to pinching point, if not exactly famine rates. Grain and pulse crops have nearly all been gathered in, and, except in a few favoured spots, the ground is free of cultivation. Country vegetables are also failing. Of fish there is none, wild fowl are taking passage to more favoured lands, and even shooting for the pot is a pleasure that cannot now be indulged in. Our timber preserves and fuel plantations are beginning to show the effects of the inadequate rain and the early dry, hot weather; and it is very doubtful whether or not our men of Lincoln green will not have to report on a diminished revenue, and when the current official year's account is compared with that of the former the comparison will be unfavourable. The old forest preserves continue to afford a good supply, so much so that they are looked upon by their owners as the fairest portions of their estate.—Madras Times Correspondent.

HAIDARABAD, DECCAN, Jan. 7.—On Wednesday last all Haidarabad was thrown into commotion by the news of an outrage committed on the preceding evening. This was no trifling tavern-brawl, in which the interchange of a sword-cut between a couple of drunken Rohillas was all the mischief. A man of learning, reputation, and position had been basely murdered when in the act of devotion. The victim was Maulavi Mohammed Zama Khan, Persian tutor to the present, as he was to the late, Nizam, and a man held in high respect by his co-religionists in Haidarabad. On Tuesday evening he went, as usual, to evening prayer, when at the close of his devotions a young Pathan, of the Mehdive sect, came on him from behind and stabbed him to the heart. The Maulavi fell dead with one loud cry, and the assassin at once made for the door by which he had entered, and by which he would, no doubt, have made his escape—the mosque being nearly deserted—but that by some chance it had been in the meantime closed. Before he could find another outlet some of the attendants of the murdered man, who had heard his cry from without, rushed in and discovered what had been done. They hunted the Pathan from corner to corner, and finally seized him, and handed him over to the police, by whom he was securely lodged in prison, where he now lies heavily ironed. The news spreading through the city caused the greatest excitement, and fears began to be entertained of the effects that might result among the lower classes of Mussulmans. However, the turbulent Arabs kept the peace till to-day, the eve of the Bakr'Id. But to-day the work began, and I am well informed that no less than seven Mehdevis have been killed. Rumour, indeed, has magnified the number many times, but the fact remains on good authority, that several of the sect have met their death. I have not heard whether the police have apprehended the murderers. It must be understood that the murder was an act of sheer fanaticism, and by the man's own confession of no political mark, and a generation or two effaces the movements from the memory of men. The Mehdevis, however, in the early days of the sect, attained to great importance in the Deccan, and the sometime potent kingdom of Ahmadnagar was towards its fall for a period entirely in their hands. In the present day their numbers are comparatively small, but many are to be found in Karmil, Elichpoor, and in many parts of the Nizam's dominions. Amid the excitement and rumours of tumults present, and to come, the party of order in the city, may well congratulate itself on one fortunate coincidence, and that is the arrival of Sir Salar Jung and the Resident, who both came in yesterday evening.—Indian Statesman's Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

COLONEL SWANSTON.—The Madras Athenæum informs us that Colonel Swanston, the Commissioner of Police at Madras, is to be rewarded for his services during the Prince's visit by being made a Companion of the Bath.

KADAPAH.—We learn that the season all over the Kadapah district will be a very bad one. The rainfall has averaged from ten to fifteen inches, compared with last year's thirty-five to fifty-five. The ground is as hard as a brick; rice is double the usual price, and though the dry crops have not been bad, the prices are rapidly rising, because the crops have failed in Mysore, and there is considerable export to that province.

MADRAS RAILWAY.—The traffic receipts of the Madras Railway for the week ending the 18th December were for passengers, &c., Rs. 82,328-9-0, and for goods, &c., Rs. 60,835-3-0, making altogether Rs. 143,163-12-0, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 166-13-9. During the corresponding week in 1874 the receipts were Rs. 126,816-7-6, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 147-12-11.

MURDER OF MR. COBIE.—A telegram, dated 10th January, to the Indian Statesman, from Rangoon says:—Beattie, a life prisoner, who murdered Cobie, the Deputy Jailor of the Rangoon Jail, on the evening of the 6th, has been committed by the magistrate to the Sessions. It appears the deceased was just leaving the ward, about 6.15, after mustering the prisoners, when the accused called out to him; on hearing himself called he turned round, when the accused instantly sprang on him and struck him on the left of the heart. Cobie cried out, staggered for the door, and died within fifteen minutes. The stab was below the collar blade, and must have touched his heart. The prisoner acknowledged doing the act, but declined questioning the witnesses till he comes before the High Court; nor would he say how he obtained the knife, but stated he made the handle of it in the ward.

MILITARY.—General Elmhirst, Officiating Commander-in-Chief in Madras, has made the following appointments on his staff:—Lieutenant-Colonel G. A. Arbuthnot, Cadre 8th Regiment Light Cavalry, to be Military Secretary, without prejudice to his duties as Assistant Adjutant-General, Maisur Division Captain A. Wright, her Majesty's 45th Foot, to be Aide-de-Camp and Interpreter. Subadar-Major Mahomed Hoossain, "Sirdar Bahadoor," to be Native Aide-de-Camp.

THE GOVERNOR.—His Grace the Governor and his party returned from his tour to the Godavery district yesterday morning, by the steamer Malda. Several ladies and gentlemen were present at the pier to receive his Grace, and there was the usual military demonstration, and the salute announcing his arrival. His Grace, we are glad to say, is much pleased with his trip, and there is a report current that, after making a short stay on the Hills, the Duke of Buckingham intends making a tour through other districts.—Madras Times, Jan. 22.

HAIDARABAD.—At a durbar held at Haidarabad on Saturday morning a handsome sword was presented to the Nizam. It had been sent from Calcutta by the Prince of Wales, in charge of Sir Salar Jung, with a complimentary letter. At the same time Sir Richard Meade produced a second karita from the Viceroy. This is understood to mean that Sir Richard's appointment is permanent, but the object of his journey to Calcutta, where he will remain only a few days, has not yet transpired. He was to leave Haidarabad on the 17th. General Wright, Commanding the Contingent, has arrived, and it is understood that he makes Bolarum his head-quarters.—Madras Times, Jan. 22.

ARRIVAL OF H.M. STEAMER "RALEIGH."—H.M.'s steamer Raleigh, commanded by Captain George Tryon, C.B., arrived in Bombay harbour on Thursday, Jan. 20, at 8.45 A.M. She escorted the Serapis and the Osborne as far as the Hooghly, and returned from thence via Madras and Trincomalee to Bombay. On arrival she saluted the Admiral's flag, and the Undaunted returned the salute.

THE LATE RAO OF CUTCH.—The Rao of Cutch has, we are told, left all his affairs in good order. Knowing he had not long to live, he, since his return to Cutch from Bombay, sealed up all his treasure after duly counting it, and placed it in charge of the Political Agent, Colonel Parr. Two men, whom he suspected of an intention to make mischief after his death, he removed out of the way. Finally, a few days before his death, he solemnly entrusted his young son and heir to the care of Colonel Parr and the British Government.

THE MOHARRAM.—As the Moharram is approaching, and there is the usual excitement consequent upon its advent amongst the Mohamedans, a number of European and native police constables are to be posted at the Juma Musjid every Friday during the festival. Friday being the Mohamedan Juma, a large number of Mohamedans assembled at the Juma Musjid at 11 A.M. to say prayers. Mr. Edginton, the Deputy Commissioner of Police, accompanied by Superintendent Smith and other inspectors, stationed themselves at the Crawford Market for the purpose of rendering assistance if required, and a number of sowars in charge of a European constable surrounded the mosque to preserve order, while Two Tanks, Null Bazaar, and other places were well guarded by the police. At about 1.30 P.M. the congregation left the mosque, and everything passed off quietly. The police officers afterwards returned to their respective divisions.—Times of India, Jan. 24.

FATAL AFFRAY IN PALITANA.—(RAJKOT, Jan. 19.)—Palitana seems to be the hotbed of trouble and dissension. The strife of the Thakore's men with the Shrawuks on the Shetrunja hill was too serious an event to be easily forgotten by your careful readers. The news I now have to give you is one of a more serious nature. A wofully awkward fracas took place a week ago between the Thakore's men and his Bhayads, or cousins. The cause of the scuffle is not yet known, but it is nevertheless a fact that in the melee a great number of men and women were killed and many more wounded. Some of the Rajpoot women have, it is said, shown an unusual amount of courage and energy in defending their husbands on this unhappy occasion, though in doing so they have fallen victims to the rage of their cowardly opponents. The sensation in the whole of Palitana has not yet subsided. The Bhayads are much enraged and discontented, and until their grievances are completly redressed some of them have sworn enmity with the Thakore's raj, and have actually dared, in these days of peace and tranquillity, to turn out in open hostility to his authority. The Political Agent has, however, strictly warned all the Chiefs and Talookdars against harbouring any of these desperadoes.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

THE INDUS VALLEY RAILWAY.—This railway has, at last, advanced far towards completion. The embankments are nearly all finished, though there are still ugly breaks here and there, faults in the level and gulfs unbridged. There seems little doubt, however, that, if the work were vigorously pushed on, the railway might be opened for traffic within twelve months. And it is not simply for the interest of those directly connected with the undertaking, or those hoping to share in the advantages it is expected to bring to Scinde, that it should be completed as quickly as possible. The money expended on it is public money, and no return of interest can ever be obtained except from passengers and goods. Surely, when it is so clearly to the general advantage that the completion of this railway should not be delayed, the Central Government is bound to take all available means for hastening on the work, and the available means are as simple as they well can be. If regular and sufficient supplies of money be authorised, a few months must see Karachi and Multan brought ten miles nearer to each other. But, even when completed, this railway's existence can never be quite certain. Its nearness to the Indus must be a constant source of danger: it may at any time be washed away. The danger, it is true, has been reduced to a minimum by keeping the railway on an average two miles from the river. But two miles is nothing, scarcely a mouthful, to the enormous Indus, gorging and disgorging vast tracts of land every day. You can scarcely sail on this river at any time without hearing loud reports; and, looking at the banks, the sounds are found to come from great masses of soil falling into the water, undermined by the rapid current; and when the swift running water concentrates its attack, it will eat away inland for three or four miles in three or four days. So the Indus Valley Railway, it would seem, must always run some chance of at least partial destruction.—Pioneer Correspondent.

Official Papers.

THE MALAYAN WAR.

The following despatch from Major-General F. Colborne has been received by the Secretary of State for War: it is dated, Headquarters, Camp at Kinta (on Kinta River), December 18, 1875:—

I have the honour to acquaint you that by the exertions of the Civil Commissioner in procuring native water transport, &c., of Captain Buller, R.N., commanding H.M.'s ship Modeste, senior naval officer, in causing the adaptation of boats to the service, and a sufficient amount of stores having been provided by the Control Department, the force, naval and military (Naval Brigade, 70 men, 2 guns, and 2 rockets; Royal Artillery, 40 men and 2 guns; 1 Battalion 10th Regiment, 100 men; 86th Regiment, 100 men), was enabled to advance from the above place up the river toward Blanja, on the 8th instant.

The labour in poling the heavily laden boats against the strong currents was so severe, and the delay caused by the grounding of some of the larger boats, and the intricacy of the channel, so frequent, that it was scarcely possible or advisable to attempt more than seven or eight miles advance each day. The troops encamped on successive nights on an island above Passir Salar, at Passir Garnam, at Pulo Telor (a short distance above Lumbha), and at two miles beyond Bhota, arriving at Blanja on the 13th inst., without having experienced any opposition on the river; the villages, however, were mostly deserted and the boats removed.

Receiving intelligence at Blanja that the Malay chiefs, Lela and Ismael (supposed to be implicated in the murder of the Resident) had passed through Blanja and taken the road to Kinta, and that it was their intention to obstruct the passage of this road, I decided, with the concurrence of the senior naval officer, and the civil commissioner, to commence an advance without delay from the Perak River, through the jungle to the Kinta River, and get possession of the Kinta capital. I accordingly proceeded with the force as before (leaving fifty men 1st Battalion 10th Regiment, under an officer, to occupy Blanja). The extreme badness of the narrow path, through the intensely thick jungle, constantly interrupted by trees of very large size fallen across it, the swampy ground and deep mud over which it was necessary to pass, and occasionally to construct a rough corderay way for the guns, rendered progress very slow.

At a turn in the path, about two or three miles from Blanja, the first opposition was encountered; a rapid fire was opened upon the advanced guard, which was under command of Lieutenant Paton, 1st Battalion 10th Regiment, from behind a stockade, concealed by the thickness of the jungle, at about thirty yards' distance. Our men placed themselves under cover and returned the fire with promptitude. One of the guns Royal Artillery and the naval rocket tube were brought forward, and the enemy retreated hastily. No casualty on our side occurred, with the exception of a severe wound through the thigh received by Dr. Randall, the colonial medical officer, who accompanied the expedition. It was impossible to ascertain the numbers of the opposing Malays, or the amount of loss inflicted on them.

After a further advance of about two miles, fire was again opened from another stockade on rising ground on our front, which was taken possession of in the same manner as the former. This was a well-chosen position, and I feel confident from the character of the work here commenced, and the extensive preparations that had been made for its completion, that it was intended to make an obstinate stand at this point, and that had this and others at favourable points been completed their capture would have been attended with some difficulty and probable loss. The jungle on both sides is for the most part impenetrable for troops, and the use of flanking parties impossible, and it is most difficult to obtain a view of the enemy interrupting the march.

The force halted at the close of the day (at dusk) on a comparatively open piece of ground on the side of a ravine, at the bottom of which there was a stream of water. Here also stockading had commenced. The labour of the men, particularly of the Royal Artillery and rocket men, had been so severe that Captain Buller and myself concurred in the expediency of resting here on the following day, a sufficient defence being thrown up to protect the force from surprise. On the following morning (the 15th) the troops and Naval Brigade again advanced, and reached the Papan Mines without impediment, except from the badness of the road, about six miles from Kinta, encamping there, and remaining the following day to allow time for the arrival of further supplies from the rear, which had been much delayed.

From this place a reconnoitring party of about forty men, under a friendly rajah (Mahmood), was sent, accompanied by Mr. Swettenham, one of the civil commissioners, whose local knowledge and thorough acquaintance with Malay has been of the greatest use.

This party halted at some open ground about two miles from Kinta. The main body advanced on the following morning, the 17th, and arrived at this spot about twelve mid-day, the road being equally bad or worse than on the former days. The enemy were found in occupation of a stockade some short distance in advance, and after some firing were dislodged.

The force proceeded to Kinta, which was taken after a slight resistance, the enemy abandoning the town and defences, and retreating up the river in their boats.

Nine (9) bronze guns of small calibre were left by them—some thrown into the river. There is no doubt the ex-Sultan Ismael had preceded us at a short interval, and from information received that it was intended strongly to obstruct the road from Blanja. There were evident signs of a hasty retreat, which I regret the smallness of the force, the situation of the town on the opposite bank of the river, and its great length and the character of the country, prevented our effectually interrupting. I am convinced that it has been of great importance to secure this road before the hostile Malays had time to obstruct the passage through this dangerous jungle more effectually than they did, and I am assured by the commissioners that the moral effect of the occupation of Kinta will be very beneficial. The Rajah Lela, with the ex-Sultan Ismael, are supposed to have fled together into the Patini, or Lower Siam territory. It is my intention to remain here until receiving further instructions from his Excellency the Governor.

I imagine it will be considered necessary to occupy this part of the country with a military force until matters are settled, and the murderers of the Resident are given up, or satisfaction obtained.

I expect shortly the arrival of a portion of the 3rd Regiment (Buffs), and a part of the Goorkha Force from Qualla Quansa.

The troops proceeded on the march without tents, carrying their waterproof sheets and blankets, but their white clothing is very ill adapted to the present service.

I am happy, however, to state that, notwithstanding the exposure, occasional heavy rains, and change of temperature at night, the health of the men has been good, and they are now comfortably housed in this town.

Miscellaneous.

LADY LYTTON has honoured Mr. Gustave Girardot, of The Studio, Upper Park-road, Haverstock-hill, with sittings for a portrait in oil.

LEGACY TO LORD LYTTON.—There is a rumour that Mr. Forster, just deceased, has bequeathed nearly the whole of his property to Lord Lytton (the new Governor-general of India), son of the late holder of that title, better known as Sir Edward Bulwer. The legacy is understood to be of much higher value than might have been expected.—Home News.

RANEE SONET KOOER HIMMUT v. BAHADOOR AND OTHERS.—This was an appeal from Bengal. The appellant, one of the widows of the well-known Rajah of Tikarree, sued the respondents, who were the Rajah's illegimate children, for possession of an estate called Pranpore, on the ground that a Mokurrurree lease of the estate granted in perpetuity by the Rajah to a deceased illegitimate daughter had reverted to the grantor on the death of the grantee, who died without leaving heirs. The respondents, under the Sheah Mohammedan law, not being her heirs; the respondents contended inter alia that if their possession was not legal the Crown was the only party entitled to oust them, and the principal question argued on the appeal was as to whether the estate escheated to the Crown or reverted to the heirs of the grantor, the lord of the fee. After hearing Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the appellant, and Mr. Doynes and Mr. Cutler for the respondents, their Lorships dismissed the appeal, on the ground that the respondents had rightly raised the jus tertii, and that the appellant was not entitled to question the respondent's possession.

SUEZ CANAL.—In a Parliamentary Paper issued on Friday the sum of £4,080,000 is asked for to pay the purchase-money of the Khedive's shares in the Suez Canal. The following explanation of the vote is appended:—"His Highness the Khedive having proposed to sell his shares in the Suez Canal Company to her Majesty's Government for £4,000,000, her Majesty's Government accepted the proposal, supposing that his Highness was still in possession of the full number (177,642), formerly belonging to him; but his Highness subsequently informed them that he had parted with some shares, and that the number in his possession actually amounted to only 176,602. A reduction corresponding to the reduced number was accordingly made in the purchase money, which amounts to £3,976,582. 2s. 6d. Messrs. N. de Rothschild undertook to pay the above-mentioned sum to the Khedive in anticipation of the vote of Parliament; and, in consideration of their trouble and risk, it was agreed that her Majesty's Government should pay to them a commission of 2½ per cent. on the purchase-money, or £99,414 11s. 1d. The balance necessary to make up a round sum is added for the purpose of meeting any incidental expenses which may be incurred."

HARDSHIPS OF SOLDIERS' WIDOWS.—Mr. Carttar, Coroner for West Kent, held an inquiry at Woolwich on Friday afternoon into the death of Thomas Wilton, Brigade Quartermaster-Sergeant of the 23rd Brigade Royal Artillery, recently returned from India. The deceased committed suicide by hanging himself at his quarters in the barracks, his mind having become affected through the increased responsibility of his office. The jury expressed a hope that Government would do something for the widow, who was left with a large family. It was stated, in reply to this, that the rules of the service precluded any thing being done, the orders being that the widow and children of soldiers shall be turned out of barracks the day after the soldier's death, and sent to where they belonged, no provision of any kind being made for them. The deceased, who had served seventeen years in India without a single complaint being made against him, was found hanging with his hands strapped behind him, and the question arose whether he could have done this himself; but a witness who produced the strap showed that he could strap his hands behind him without much difficulty. The jury returned a verdict of "Committed suicide whilst in a state of unsound mind, and expressed a hope that, as nothing would be done by Government for the widow and five children, the officers and men of the 23rd Brigade would make a subscription amongst themselves.

SINGULAR WILL CASE.—At the Judicial Committee on Saturday, Feb. 5, judgment was given in an appeal, The Mayor of Lyons v. The Advocate-General of Bengal and others, in which a question was raised as to a very large sum left by General Martin, who rose from being a private soldier to the rank of general in India, where he died in 1801, worth about £300,000. He left by will large sums to Lyons (of which place he was a native) and to Calcutta and Lucknow, which had been paid. Sums were left to Calcutta and Lucknow as to imprisoned debtors, and also criminals who had behaved well in jail. In India, by operation of law, the objects had failed, and a large sum had accumulated, which fell into the residuary property. Considerable litigation had taken place as to the application of the bequests in the will. The city of Lyons prayed to participate in the large sums that had accrued on account of the objects of the testator's charity having failed in the places mentioned in India, and the question was argued before the Judicial Committee whether the city of Lyons were not to share as residuary legatees in the large property. The case was argued by Mr. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. Hemming, Q.C., for the city of Lyons, as appellants from a decision of the High Court; and by Mr. Cotton, Q.C., and Mr. Macnaghten, for the respondents, who represented the other charitable institution. The object of the testator was to "perpetuate" his name in Calcutta, Lucknow, and Lyons, and he left large sums to each for charitable purposes. The question was whether the principle of cy-près prevailed to exclude Lyons so as to confine the large property to objects similar to those which had failed in the particular localities. Their lordships held that the High Court was correct in excluding the city of Lyons from the particular charities in India, and the appeal would be dismissed with costs.

THE 23RD BRIGADE R.A.—The Delhi Gazette gives the following summary of the services of the 23rd Brigade on the occasion of the departure of the brigade from India for England:—Raised in 1749, it may be truly said that this brigade for the past 126 years has been intimately connected with the rise, progress, and stability of our Eastern Empire. We believe that there is no other brigade or regiment that can boast of so ancient, noble, and glorious an escutcheon. For the first time during its existence this gallant brigade leaves India after a career of service of which those who now represent it may be justly proud. Its conduct in quarters and its bearing on parade have always been in keeping with its prowess and persevering behaviour in the field. We feel sure that on its arrival at Woolwich it will meet with the welcome which has always been accorded by an elder foster-brother-in-arms to those who have been so long alienated for their country's good from the paternal common. For ourselves personally we can but regret the loss, but we are unselfish enough to wish the 23rd Brigade a cordial God speed. The following is an outline of the services of the 23rd Brigade Royal Artillery:—No. 1 Battery, formerly 1st Company 4th Battalion Bengal Artillery; raised 1749; greater part perished in Black Hole at Calcutta; remnant at Plassey. 1803-4—Bhurtpore and Agra. 1843—Maharajpore. 1845-46—Moodkee, Ferozeshah, Sobraon. 1848-49—Chillianwallah, Goojerat. 1852-53—Various expeditions on North-West Frontier. 1857-58—Siege and capture of Delhi, Rohilkund. 1864-65—Furnished detachments for Bhootan. No. 2 Battery, formerly 4th Company 4th Battalion Bengal Artillery; raised 1763. On field service in 1763-64, but no record to show what service it was. 1801—China. 1817—With grand Army. 1843—Maharajpore. 1845-46—Moodkee, Ferozeshah, Sobraon. 1848-49—Chillianwallah, Goojerat, pursuit of Sikhs and Afghans to Peshawur. 1850 to 1858—Various expeditions on North-West Frontier, under Sir Charles Napier, Sir Colin Campbell, and others. 1857-58—Siege and capture of Delhi, Duggorah, Bareilly, Shahjehanpore, Mohumdie, Shahabad, Mutwolie. 1868—Hazara campaign, including expedition against tribes of Black Mountain. No. 4 Battery, formerly 2nd Company 2nd Battalion Bengal Artillery, raised 1779. 1817-18-19—With grand army. 1842—Affghanistan, permitted to wear Cabool on appointments G.O.C.C. 18-11-42. 1845-46—Ferozeshah, Sobraon. 1848-49—Chillianwallah, Goojerat. 1851-52-53—Various expeditions against tribes of North-West Frontier. 1857-58—Portion at Delhi and Lucknow. 1863.—Portion at Umbeyla. 1864—Furnished detachments for Bhootan. Was reorganised in 1858, and served in the Oude campaign in 1858-59. No. 6 Battery. A new battery, raised in Feb., 1862; no war services. No. 7 Battery, formerly 3rd Company 4th Battalion Bengal Artillery; raised in 1786. 1826—Siege and capture of Bhurtpore. 1843—Battle of Maharajpore. 1845-46—Moodkee, Ferozeshah, Sobraon.

IMPORTANT WILL CASE.—LOW AND OTHERS v. REECE AND REECE AND OTHERS INTERVENING.—This is a suit in the Probate Court, which was opened on Feb. 10. The plaintiffs propounded the will of the late Major-General Reece, who died at 69, Huntingdon-street, Barnsbury, Islington, on the 1st August, 1875. Mr. Serjeant Parry, Dr. Spinks, Q.C., and Mr. Glyn were counsel for the plaintiffs; Sir Henry James, Q.C., Mr. Inderwick, Q.C., Dr. Pritchard, and Mr. Hall for the defendants; and Mr. Murphy, Q.C., and Mr. Nasmith for the interveners. From the opening statement of Mr. Serjeant Parry it appeared that the testator had seen much service in the Indian army, and had risen to the rank of a major-general. He retired from the service in 1861, but the portion of his life which was under consideration in the present case was that running from 1869 or 1870 up to his death, at the time of which he was seventy-six years of age. He had been separated for a long time from his wife, who predeceased him, and for a considerable time previous to his death he had not been visited by any of his family. That family consisted of two sons and a daughter, who is the intervener in the case, and with whom he always corresponded in the most affectionate terms. In 1867 he was living at Plymouth, where he met Mr. Cornbloom, who was then a young man, and in whom he took an interest. In 1869 he took a house in Huntingdon-street, Barnsbury, and on doing so he had the young man and his parents to live with him. To this young man he advanced money to place him in business as a warehouseman in Houndsditch. Altogether, up to the execution of the will now in dispute, he had advanced £2,600. He executed a will on April 23, 1875. Previous to that he consulted the plaintiff, Mr. Low, who is a member of the firm of Grindlay and Co., bankers, in Parliament-street, at whose establishment he was a constant visitor, and who were his bankers. By this will of April he appointed his two sons as his executors, and divided his property between them and his daughter. In regard to the amount due to him by young Cornbloom, he provided that it should be paid by instalments running over a period of several years. On the 19th May of the same year he executed a codicil to that will, by which he cut his youngest son, who is a lieutenant in the Royal navy, out of part of his share of his estate, ordering it to be divided between his eldest son and his daughter; and as to Cornbloom's debt to him of £2,600, he ordered that £1,500 should be paid by instalment running over some years, the remaining £1,100 to be remitted altogether. It was stated that the sons had not seen the father for some six years; but somewhere about May they made their appearance, and the youngest son, finding that by the codicil of the 19th of that month his interest in his father's estate had been very much cut down, seems to have adopted means to annoy his father. In consequence of these annoyances the testator on the 1st of July executed the will now propounded, by which he left legacies of £1,000 to each of his sons and the whole of the residue of his estate to his daughter. That will the sons now opposed, but it was stated that they would not oppose the will of the 28th April previous. It was stated that the value of the estate was from £10,000 to £12,000, a considerable portion of it being made up of prize money which the testator had received for his services during the Indian Mutiny. The main question being the validity of the will of the 1st July, 1875, Mr. Low, the principal executor under that will, was called, and explained the circumstances under which it was executed. The case was continued on the 11th and 12th inst., and is expected to last several days.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, Feb. 10.—INDIAN LEGISLATION.—Lord G. HAMILTON, in asking for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the law relating to legislation in India, explained that it was substantially the Bill which passed through the other House of Parliament last session, and which consolidated the limitations upon the legislative powers of the Governor-General, with one exception, which it was proposed to omit, and provided that no court, save the High Court of one of the Presidencies, should have power to decide that any act of the Governor-General was ultra vires. Leave was then given.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, Feb. 11.—THE SUEZ CANAL.—On the motion of Captain PIM, a return was ordered showing the number of English ships of war and transports which have paid tonnage dues on going and returning through the Suez Canal during 1875.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHAPLAINS IN INDIA.—A short conversation occurred between Mr. O'REILLY and Lord G. HAMILTON relating to the salaries of Roman Catholic chaplains in India, in the course of which the Under-Secretary intimated that it was the intention of the Indian Government to augment these salaries. After this a resolution was agreed to (to form the basis of a future Bill) authorising the payment of salaries on a higher scale and for the appointment of a legal member of the Indian Council.

BAIRD SMITH, ALEXANDER TAYLOR AND JOHN NICHOLSON.—Then there was Baird Smith, Chief of the Engineer Department, who was also enfeebled by much sickness, and the distresses of a painful wound. He had been struck by the fragment of a shell, when superintending his work in the batteries, and he had been lamed by the blow; but, when he ought to have been on the sick-list, he was in the full swing of active employment when he ought to have been in his tent, he was busy in the works. Worn to a skeleton by the most weakening of all ailments, he went about, when it was possible for him to go about at all, saturated with opium and brandy, dragging his maimed limb after him, with painful efforts; but never losing his high courage, or the habitual cheerfulness of his demeanour. Like Chamberlain, he had an assistant, who was one of the younger heroes of the camp. In Alexander Taylor, his second in command, he found a man capable of any amount of work, and ready for any heroic enterprise. His energies were unbounded, his spirit unfailing; and it was truly a fortunate circumstance, that when the frailty of the flesh restricted Baird Smith's personal activities, Taylor was ever ready and eager to pass from point to point, and to display his bodily presence, which was always inspiriting and encouraging. There was little or no sympathy between Wilson and Baird Smith. They were men altogether cast in different moulds. But the General fully recognised the great attainments of the Chief Engineer; and though really outwardly courteous or orally compliant, practically yielded to his opinions. And now united with these two, and in daily counsel with them, was John Nicholson, a born soldier, who seemed to have come down to Delhi with a special mission to take it. He had chafed under the long delay, which had left the vast and guilty city so long in the hands of the mutineers. Patience was not one of his virtues. With great ardour commonly some impetuosity is combined. John Nicholson had not the cool temper and calm judgment of Neville Chamberlain. He overlooked all difficulties and ignored all responsibilities; and, perhaps, he did not always make allowance for those who clearly saw the one and were compelled to accept the other. He could not stand still. Active among the active, he was eager to execute any kind of work that might be entrusted to him, until the day of final retribution should arrive, when he coveted, and believed that he would obtain, the post of honour at the head of the storming party. No man doubted his power, and no man envied his reputation. All felt that a great soldier had come among them, full-brained and lion-hearted; and they looked to him to lead them to victory.—Kaye's Sepoy War, Vol. III.

THE PIANO-MÉCANIQUE.

DEBAIN Inventor.

A Piano on which any person, although unacquainted with Music, can perform the most difficult and elaborate Compositions with faultless execution and delicacy.

The Piano-Mécanique is actuated by means of planchettes (small boards), into which is pinned the Composition to be performed; and these planchettes are caused to travel on a metal plate which is fitted on the top of the Instrument. This metal plate is pierced in a straight line across its breadth by a series of small openings, up through which project the steel ends of the keys of a miniature keyboard, chromatically arranged. The pins of the planchette, coming in contact with the miniature keyboard, act on the keys in a similar manner as would the fingers of the hand.

The metal pins of the planchette vary in height according to the marks of expression, accent, etc., indicated by the composer, the highest producing the full force of blow from the hammer, and the lowest the most delicate. It will thus be seen that every conceit of the author can be copied, and afterwards mechanically rendered in all its integrity; in fact, execution quite beyond the manual dexterity of the most accomplished performer is, by this system, ensured.

The Piano-Mécanique, when compared with kindred Instruments, presents at once its advantages; notably:—Compositions can be played in their entirety, there being no necessity for mutilatio to meet the capacities of the Instrument, nor curtailment to suit the circumference of a barrel; greato facility for selecting the Music to be performed, and its requiring much less space; its faultless execution and complete means of expression; the facility with which any single Composition mag be obtaine for it, and at small cost; its freedom from derangement, either by excessive use or from the extremes climate; the advantage of a Seven-Octave Manual for ordinary use.

In proof of the success of the Piano-Mécanique, it may be stated that upwards of 3,000 Compositions, ranging from the simple Ballad or Dance to the difficult Fantasia, Overture, or Grand Symphony, have been arranged for it, and to these, additions are almost daily being made.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, January 31; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, January 29; Calcutta, January 28.

THE native troops at Delhi seem to have been very much charmed with the Prince of Wales. The enthusiasm of the 11th N.I., who received new colours from his hands, has culminated in a memorial praying that they may be allowed to carry on these colours some device which may be a standing record of the recent honour. The native officers have expressed themselves most warmly with regard to his "presence," courtesy, and other princely attributes. His Royal Highness gave a present to each native regiment in the Delhi Camp, besides donations to charitable funds connected with the British troops.

SEDASHEO RAO GAIKWAR, whose brother shot himself when the Government of India put a Prince of the Kandesh family on the throne, had been deported from Baroda in charge of a party of police, on account of his intrigues against the new Government. On the 29th January he had reached Jabalpur under charge of Captain Jackson, and was to be forwarded the next night to Allahabad.

SIR LOUIS MALLET was to leave Calcutta on the night of January 27 for Bombay, whence he was to start on his homeward journey by the next steamer, or, as one paper declares, by that of February 7. His medical advisers had ordered him home at once after his last attack of fever, as the only chance of saving his life. "It is much to be regretted," says the Friend of India, "that Sir Louis's health has thus necessitated his sudden departure. It can hardly be supposed that he can have fully investigated the questions, whatever they may have been, which led to his visit, but he has doubtless carried away with him materials for maturing his opinions on some of them."

AT the meeting of the Viceregal Council on Tuesday, Jan. 25, Mr. Hobhouse presented the report of the Committee on the Burmah Emigration Bill, and the Bill was passed. The report on the Pleaders' and Revenue Agents' Bill was presented. Sir R. Temple introduced the Chutia Nagpur Government Estates Bill, which was referred to a Select Committee.

A TELEGRAM had been received in Calcutta from the Marquis of Salisbury, to the effect that Lord Lytton purposes reaching Calcutta on the 2nd of April. It was inferred, of course, that he is going out via Bombay. Lord Northbrook is expected to return home by the same route, immediately after Lord Lytton's arrival.

THE Indian papers confirm the statement telegraphed from Rangoon that the Government of India had made up its mind to send an armed force of three hundred men, one-third British, through the King of Burmah's territory to meet the Grosvenor Mission, from the East of China. It was also confidently reported that Colonel Duncan, the Resident at Mandalay, had been ordered not to take his boots off in the King's presence. It appears from the Pioneer, which confirms the truth of this rumour, that when Sir Douglas Forsyth's party went to Mandalay, he was instructed "not to bar the discussion of the weighty matters which he was charged to settle with the King, by insisting on dispensing with an immemorial formality, if the Court of Ava seemed impracticable on the point." It was always intended however that the issue should be raised in earnest at the first favourable opportunity, and the right moment has now come for doing away with an unworthy concession to a barbarian's pride. In the words of the Bombay Gazette—"when we remember how early English travellers in the East maintained their self-respect and the dignity of their country by refusing to pay a degrading homage to the greatest Sovereigns, we cannot but be amazed at the carelessness which has permitted ridiculous kinglets of the Burmese type to impose the observance of a humiliating etiquette on the representatives of the most powerful Government in Asia."

MESSRS. MACDONELL AND GEDDES, of the Bengal Civil Service, who were deputed to inquire into the state of the country and crops in Bahar, have sent in their report. The existence of local scarcity, in some parts equalling that of the famine of 1874, is said to be placed beyond question. But the crops in Saran, Champaran, and Monghir, are yielding far better than was once expected. No importation of grain through Government agency is recommended, for large supplies were coming in from Gorakhpur and the North-West Provinces. It is a comfort to learn that no attempt is made to establish a ground for State interference with the ordinary course of trade. According to the Behar Herald, Mr. Metcalfe, the Commissioner of Patna, was to take up his head-quarters at Pusa, from whence he will supervise the relief operations. The complaints of want of rain were become very general throughout Bengal, but the reports are favourable on the whole.

IT is stated that Colonel Munro, a Punjab officer, has gone to Jacobabad "to relieve Colonel Loch of the political charge of the Khelat Agency." In point of fact the Khelat Agency has been in abeyance ever since Major Harrison left the Khan's Court, and the Government of India forbade his return thither. Colonel Loch's appointment is that of Political Superintendent of the Upper Sind frontier. We presume, however, that he has latterly conducted such relations as were still maintained with Khelat. The appointment of Colonel Munro may indicate the adoption of a bolder policy towards Khelat; or is it a first step towards the long-desired union of Sind with the Punjab?

FROM Madras we learn that cholera was again at work not only in the Presidency town, but in the Provinces. In the North and South Arcot districts it was said to be raging fearfully, whole villages migrating from the latter. In Nellor and Bellary, too, it was very bad. One of the victims in the former place has been its District Engineer, Captain Smith. In Tanjor, where there has been a fresh outbreak, the people are panic stricken. Among those who have been fatally attacked in that district was the wife of the Collector himself, Mr. Thomas. In Calicut the epidemic is beginning to abate. In Madras there have been some fatal cases already.

Digitized by Google

WE understand that the India Office being desirous of pushing forward the Indian marine survey, it is under consideration to add another vessel to the number already on this service. An additional supply of surveying officers will also probably be obtained from the half-pay lists of the Royal Navy.

THE trial of the eighteen persons accused of being concerned in the Kotagiri massacre has ended in four of the prisoners being sentenced to death, and two to penal servitude for life. The rest were acquitted. It seems that the chief instigators of the tragedy held a panchayat, to which a representative was sent by each Badaga house, and it was there decided that in order to secure themselves from the evil influence exercised over them by Chenna Coramba he should be murdered, and the whole of his tribe extirpated. This decision having been adopted by all the members of the panchayat, the ways and means for carrying it out were discussed and settled with the results of which our readers are aware.

The voyage of the Serapis out to India was marked by so many accidents that her safe arrival at Calcutta must have given no small relief to many minds. But the narrowest escape perhaps of all which she experienced took place off the coast of Southern India. It appears to be a fact that while she was anchored at Tuticorin, the single anchor that was holding her carried away, and for some time the huge ship was gradually drifting without the knowledge of the responsible authorities on board, though the fact was suspected by many. When the cable was hove in, it was found that the shank of the anchor only came up with it. The anchor itself had parted just where the shank joins the flukes, and a great flaw in the metal was discovered to be the cause. The shoulders of the flukes which had remained attached to the shank were found to be burnished as bright as steel from the friction occasioned by their being slowly dragged against the bottom as the great ship gradually drifted. During all this time his Royal Highness was on board, unconscious of the real danger which was at that moment imperilling the safety of his ship.

THAT the pay of the Sepoy in these days is not what it ought to be is a fact which we cannot afford to overlook. A Madras paper, referring to the agitation which has recently been excited by outcries and proposals for the benefit of our European soldiers, and the officers of the Native Army, pleads that "whilst the British Government looks after the interest of its own children, neither must the wants of faithful servants—such as we expect our sepoys to be—be forgotten; it is not too much to say that the position of the native soldier, whose pay some years back was double in value to that of others of his class, is now far worse than the majority of pariah coolies, for whilst the latter go with 'the times,' poor Johnny Sepoy stands very much where he was a century ago."

WE learn that the Viceroy in Council has exempted from customs duties all China clay, drugs, chemicals, ochre, and rosin imported into India by paper manufacturers, and shown, to the satisfaction of the chief customs authority, to be intended solely for use in the manufacture of paper.

THE last administration report from the Rajputana Agency informs us that the last remaining debts of the Alwar State were to have been paid off by the end of the year just past. The treasury has now a balance of seven lakhs, and Major Cadell has still at least two years left him to complete his projects of reform. It may be remembered that early in 1870 the continued misrule of the Rajah of Alwar led to an insurrection in that State, which Captain Cadell, V.C., Bhil Agent in Central India, was sent to deal with. Malharao Rajah Sheodan Singh had allowed his Mussulman favourites to trample on the rights of his Hindu subjects, until the latter rose in arms against their oppressors. Anarchy and pillage prevailed throughout the State, and altogether the position was such as to call forth the highest qualities of a strong and able political officer. The demands of the insurgent Rajputs were carefully examined; the Maharajah was lectured time after time, but to no purpose; and when Lord Mayo was at length compelled to deprive him of power he still tried his best to thwart "Kedal" in every way. An outbreak in the jail, where Major Cadell nearly lost his life, was headed by men shouting the Maharajah's name. Conspiracies against the Political Agent were often reported, and well-disposed natives at Alwar deemed his life in much danger. It was believed that the Maharajah was likely to recover power in time, and many feared to offend him by supporting the Political Agent and his council of administration. But in the face of all opposition, Major Cadell carried out a series of extensive reforms in a wonderfully short time. Sheodan Singh died sixteen months ago; but before his death eleven lakhs of debt had been paid off. Courts presided over by able natives were working successfully; a fiscal chaos had been replaced by a well-ordered system; the first scientific field survey ever made in a Native State was completed, and a regular settlement of the land revenue was far advanced; a complete set of public works, including a net-work railway, feeder roads, and all necessary public buildings, had been planned, and partly finished; the treasury and accounts were well organised, and general content prevailed. It must be remembered that in reforms of this kind everything depends upon the Political Agent, who is generally allowed to select his own council, and the officials, European and native, who are to aid him. It is to be hoped that Major Cadell's achievements in Alwar will receive their just reward from the Government he has served so well.

FROM an official report lately published in India, it appears that the Central Provinces may some day become the silk country of the East. Silk-growing, already pursued by large numbers of the people, is said to be "capable of indefinite expansion." The trees on which the tusser silkworm thrives grow in every corner of the Central Provinces; and where the trees thrive it is fair to assume that the worms themselves would thrive also. At any rate, the local Government is resolved on settling the question by actual experiment; and as a preliminary step, all the available writings on the subject are to be examined and epitomised for the information of the Indian Government and the public. If the expectations of the Government are well founded, the silk industry, like tea, indigo, and coffee-planting, may soon offer a profitable field for the investment of English capital.

THE Prince of Wales, who is now on a shooting tour in Kumaon and the Nepal Terai, camped on the night of Feb. 15 at Nagla in Kumaon. The Royal party were advancing by easy stages towards Nepal, striking camp daily. There had been fair sport in deer and other game, but only one tiger had been seen. On the 15th his Royal Highness shot a fine bear, and Lord Aylesford another All the party were in excellent health.

WE believe that the voyage from India to Portsmouth usually occupies the Serapis a day or two over a month, always provided she does not break down. Should the Prince of Wales leave India on the 10th of March, in accordance with the present arrangements, his Royal Highness may therefore be expected at Portsmouth, barring accidents, some time in Passion week.

WE learn by telegraph that a Burmese Embassy on its way to Europe arrived at Suez on Feb. 15.

ACCORDING to a recent telegram from Rangoon fifteen of those concerned in the late plot have been convicted of treason, and five of the abetting of treason. The head conspirator is sentenced to be transported for twenty-one years, and the others to transportation for ten years and lesser terms. The trial lasted three weeks. Seven of the accused were acquitted.

THE idea of curing snake-bites by injections of ammonia appears to have been successfully applied in several instances lately reported from Australia. At Seymour, on the 14th of December, a young man, twenty-six years old, named Dwyer, was bitten by a snake between the thumb and the first finger of the right hand. Although the wound was received at nine o'clock, and no treatment was applied until half-past eleven, when the patient was powerless and almost insensible, ammonia was injected into his right arm, when he revived at once. He suffered a relapse, but the ammonia was again successfully applied, and he ultimately recovered. At Bungaree a young girl bitten by a snake gradually sank into a state of stupor. Two hours and a-half after she was bitten ammonia was injected. Relief was immediately obtained, and the girl rapidly recovered. A third case happened on the Acheron, eleven miles from Alexandria, where a little girl, two years of age, the daughter of a farmer named Doak, was bitten by a snake just above the ankle of the left foot. Symptoms of complete coma were setting in, when the ammonia injection was used with magical effect. The child sat upright and became quite lively. A relapse occurring, a second injection was made with equal effect, and the child from that time continued to improve until her recovery. Another case is mentioned of a native woman on the Wirrega station, South Australia, who was bitten by a snake on the ankle. She became unconscious, and the surface of the body was turning cold, when ammonia was injected. The woman at once revived and recovered.

AT the annual dinner of the Associated Chambers of Commerce, held last Wednesday in London, Lord Salisbury, in replying to the toast of her Majesty's Ministers, expressed his pleasure at the reference made to India in the Chairman's speech, and the pride it gave him "to see that that subject was now one of the foremost questions of the day. It was not the visit of the Prince of Wales alone which had attracted the public attention, though that visit would be productive of the greatest possible good. They had lately had a great deal of attention directed to a certain canal; but when they came to investigate the real root of the question they found it was because it was the high road to India." Commerce, his Lordship went on to say, was "the very essence of life in India, and unless they could find a continuous stimulus to commerce with India he could not but anticipate great distress to its population. They were, therefore, not open to the reproach that they looked upon India merely in a commercial point of view. It was their duty to do everything they could to stimulate the commerce of India, which was of vital importance to the teeming multitudes of the Peninsula." His Lordship then paid a tribute of respect to Sir L. Mallet, who had been sent out to organise Indian commerce, but who had been obliged to return in consequence of ill-health. With reference to the Suez Canal, he said—"Because we were commercial we were not necessarily tame; we were ready to strike hard and strong where it was necessary. That had always been our character, and it was this feeling which had led to the general assent of the country in respect to the action of the Government in regard to securing the independence of the Suez Canal. It would be absurd to treat the individual act as of so much importance as the policy that led to it, and that policy was supported by no class more warmly than by the class represented by the Associated Chambers of Commerce. That policy would be one quite in unison with the feelings of the United Chambers of Commerce, and he believed the Government would have their full support."

A BILL has been brought before Parliament by Lord George Hamilton and the Attorney-General "to amend the law relating to legislation in India, with a view to the consolidation thereof." This Bill proposes to give the Governor-General of India in Council, under certain restrictions, power to make laws for "all persons whatever, all courts whatever, and all places and things whatever," throughout her Majesty's Indian dominions, for all native Indian subjects of her Majesty beyond as well as within those territories, for all European British subjects, and for all servants of the Indian Government within the dominions of native States in India in alliance with her Majesty, and for all persons on the high seas on board British ships within certain degrees of latitude. The validity of the acts of the Governor-General in Council is not to be questioned by any court of justice in India, except the High Courts, and if not disallowed by her Majesty they are to be of the same force as Acts of Parliament. The Bill also defines the extent of the legislative power of the subordinate legislatures.

IS the Queen of England to add to her present titles that of Empress or Queen of India? This, if anything, was the question raised by the Bill which Mr. Disraeli introduced last Thursday into the House of Commons, to enable her Majesty to "add to the style and title appertaining to the Imperial Crown of the United Kingdom and its dependencies." Mr. Disraeli explained how it happened that the proposed addition had not been made before, complimented the Prince of Wales on the way in which he had carried out his "great enterprise," and assured the House that by passing the Bill they would give "great satisfaction not only to the Princes, but to the nations of India." Such a step, he added, would be "an answer to those mere economists and foreign diplomatists who announce that India is to us only a burden or a danger," for it would show our firm resolve to hold India as a part of the British Empire, and "one of the most precious possessions of the Crown." All these were certainly good arguments for the formal assumption of some title which, as Sir G. Campbell said, would "show that England had taken India and meant to keep it," and that her Majesty had assumed "in name, as in effect, the position once occupied by the Great Mogul." But the Prime Minister's silence about the new title evoked some vigorous comments from Mr. Lowe and Mr. Forster, based on the assumption that "Empress of India" was the title implied in this case. Most of the objections taken to the word "Empress" may be dismissed as of very small moment; and indeed, if any formal title is necessary, it matters little whether Queen or Empress be the word used. But being English, why should we not stick to the good old English word "Queen?" Empress may sound bigger and more absolute to some Western minds; but after all, as the Times says, it is not English, nor is it a title known to the East. What is good enough for ourselves should suffice for the people of India, who in the Queen of England would readily recognise their own Máhárani.

WE are glad to see that Sir George Campbell means to draw attention on Friday next to the injury involved in delaying the settlement of a question which is still exercising the minds of the Government. How to combine fit provision for India's military needs with the new principle of short service, is a problem which any Government might well despair of solving. "Careful inquiries," says Mr. Hardy, "have been made into the subject, but no decision has yet been reached." There is in fact but one decision possible—the decision implied in Punch's memorable "advice to persons about to marry." Don't make the attempt to combine things so opposite as India's requirements and the short-service system. Like oil and water they cannot be combined, and any attempt to combine them will only end disastrously for India, if not for both countries. What India wants is a local British Army, recruited only for service in the East, on terms good enough to attract a steady flow of good men without overburdening the Indian Treasury on account of too frequent reliefs. This may be called by some people a retrograde step—but what of that? When the choice lies, as in this case, between good and evil, are we to prefer the latter because the former involves some retracing of steps?

THE Russian Invalid of February 16, correcting its previous news, states that the entry of Nasr-Uddin, son of the ex-Khan Khudoyar, into Khokan, was frustrated on the 2nd current by a force of Kipchak Khirghises, under Abdullah Beg, who had been appointed by Fulat Beg governor of the town. Nasr-Uddin, with 1,000 horsemen, fled to Makhram, and placed himself under Russian protection. The inhabitants of Khokan and its neighbourhood, at whose invitation Nasr-Uddin had returned, remained at first perfectly neutral; but on being persuaded that Russia desired his restoration they attacked the Kipchaks on the 9th current, and having routed them sent another deputation to Makhram, asking Nasr-Uddin to return as their Khan. The latter thereupon again started for Khokan on the 9th, and sent a letter to General Scobeleff asking him for assistance. At the same time, another letter reached the Russian camp from Abdullah Beg, asking whether he was to permit the entry of Nasr-Uddin into Khokan, and stating that the inhabitants declared they would prefer to live under Russian rule.

OXFORD has done the right thing by Professor Max Müller, and England will be grateful for the concession which secures the further presence among us of the great Sanskrit scholar whose fame reflects a certain lustre on the land of his adoption. At the Convocation held on Tuesday last, a proposal to relieve Professor Max Müller of the obligation to lecture, and to provide for the appointment of a deputy who should receive one-half the salary of the present Professor, was introduced in a full and able statement by the Dean of Christ Church. The object of his motion was to prevent the Professor from carrying out his intention of resigning. Vienna had just offered him a Chair of Sanskrit and provision for the publication of his books. As an immediate answer was required, Dean Liddell proposed to settle the matter at once by a provisional decree which would save Oxford's credit and secure to England the fruits of Mr. Max Müller's future labours. His eloquent exposition of the great scholar's past services found an approving answer in the speeches of several Dons and Professors, and in the votes of a large majority out of a full house.

MATERIALS FOR PAPER.—The bamboo has been employed by the Chinese from time immemorial for paper making. In former years large quantities of writing paper, made, as we understand, from this material, used to be imported into Calcutta, and a pleasant paper it is to write on for rough purposes; but it seems to have gone quite out of vogue, and is not now obtainable. The removal of the excise duty on manufactured paper, and the stamps from newspapers, the extended and extending number of daily and other journals issued at a cheap price, may be cited as among the influencing causes of its greatly increased demand. Then there is the extensive and yearly increasing correspondence throughout the world, caused partly by increasing commerce, and partly by reduction in postage. Educational progress, as it has been observed, leads to more writing, reading, and book printing; but it is not merely for writing and reading purposes that so large a quantity of paper is required. It subserves many other uses, which are annually increasing—wrapping materials, card board, papier maché, &c. Certain articles of dress are also manufactured from paper, such as shirt collars and fronts, wristbands, and even bonnets. We learn from the Mechanics' Magazine, in an interesting article on "New Use for Paper," that a M. Pavy has taken out a patent for a peculiar process of utilising vegetable and animal materials for what is called a "felted" manufacture, and which mixture gives a paper of great strength, flexibility, and pliancy. The uses to which this paper can be put are many; among others, for table cloths, bed furniture, imitation chintzes and cretones, quilts, and certain articles of female dress. Then, again, it would appear that what is called building paper forms a regular article of commerce in the United States. It is used on the outside of frame buildings, and under shingles and floors, to keep out the cold; and on the inside instead of plastering. It is said to be both warm and cheap. In some parts of Prussia paper tiles are used for roofing barns, sheds, and stables. Though waste materials are now utilised to a much greater extent than formerly, and, as competition becomes sharper, will be utilised to an even greater degree, still the necessity for an increase of vegetable products for the manufacture of the finer descriptions of paper is forcing itself on the attention of the many who are interested therein; and India, abounding, as it does, with such a variety of fibrous-yielding and other plants, which are already employed for this purpose, would be found to possess yet more suitable kinds, were full inquiries instituted with this object in view. The plantain has often been referred to as a good paper yielder, and we observe that the late Dr. Royle, in his "Fibrous Plants of India," writes most hopefully of it. His favourable opinion has, unfortunately, misled several. Attempts were made in the vicinity of Calcutta, more than half a century ago, by a scientific inquirer, Dr. Bruce, so to utilise the trunk of the ordinary plantain of Bengal; but his experiments proved unsatisfactory, the yield of fibre being small compared to the weight of the trunk, and the material itself wanting in strength. We have, however, amongst our various grasses, including the bamboo, some kinds, the "Moong" for instance, which could, no doubt, be profitably employed to feed our paper mills.—Englishman.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

SATURDAY, February 19, 1876.

MR. MARGARY'S JOURNEY.

WE were present on Monday evening at the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, and listened with much interest to the Diary of Mr. Margary, written during his journey across the empire of China to Bhamo in Burmah. It is, however, very concise, little more than an itinerary, and was no doubt meant to be filled up at a future time. He appears to have met for the most part with every consideration and courtesy from the Chinese officials, and not till he passed out of China proper and entered the Kah-Khen or Singpho Hills did he meet with any incivility. These hills lie between Burmah and China, and are inhabited by warlike savages, whose chief support is the tribute, the black-mail, or the plunder exacted from travellers in their transit through their country. They are known to Indian history as Singphos; an outstanding tribe of the great confederation of that name that occupy the mountains between the Brahmaputra and the Irawadi. From Dr. McCosh's "Topography of Assam" we learn that the Singphos are divided into twelve principal tribes, each having its own chief, but every chief maintains his separate independence, and unites only in event of a general war. They are all more or less subservient to the British or the Burmese Government. The Singphos have for generations been the terror of the wretched Assamese, making irruptions into their country, and carrying off the inhabitants into slavery. In these inroads they have been known to muster an army of 3,000 men, armed with spears and muskets, threatening to carry into captivity the whole civil and military authorities of Assam; but the whole force was repulsed by a handful of Assam Infantry under Capt. Nuifville. An escort of three hundred soldiers was not two much to give security to the British Envoy in transit through the Kah-Khen Hills.

In the meantime the two expeditions are concentrating upon Yunan-Foo, where it is probable that a Court of Inquiry will assemble. The telegraph informs us that fourteen of the supposed murderers have been apprehended, and that General Li-si-tai is also to be put upon his trial. Fortunately, both the Burmese and the Chinese Government seem favourably disposed to the conviction of the guilty parties, and we shall watch the proceedings with due interest.

It is a matter of sincere regret that the first British subject who ever travelled across the Empire of China should have perished before his enterprise was completed, a martyr to his public duty; but condign vengeance will be exacted from his murderers, and Margary's name will be inscribed on the long roll of explorers who sacrificed their lives for the good of their country.

GRIEVANCES OF INDIAN CIVILIANS.

THE Committee appointed by the Indian Government to inquire into the grievances of Indian Civil servants in the North-Western Provinces have at length sent in their report, and a despatch founded thereon will no doubt be shortly forwarded home from Calcutta. The cause of the aggrieved civilians was stoutly fought last year by Mr. Lowe and his supporters; and the charges of questionable faith on the part of the Indian Government were practically admitted by many speakers on both sides of the House of Commons. The discussion issued in a Ministerial promise of full inquiry, followed in good time by the appointment of the Committee, whose report has just been sent up to the Viceroy.

This Report, we are told, takes much the same view as that expounded last year by Mr. Lowe. The grievances are acknowledged, and certain remedies proposed. One of these latter consists in offering liberal inducements to the civilians of thirteen to fifteen years' standing to retire. It appears that from 1860 to 1863 the number of men sent out in the Civil Service far exceeded the requirements of the State, and at this moment no adequate provision exists for their suitable employment. Sir Richard Temple lays special stress on this point. Civilians on Rs. 500 to Rs. 700 a month are doing work which was formerly done, and might again be done, by native, or uncovenanted, officers for Rs. 200 or Rs. 300. The cost of civilians' services is therefore needlessly large, while their unnecessary numbers indefinitely delay their chance of reaching the rank and emoluments which were held out at home as inducements for Indian service. The Committee therefore propose, in the first place, to relieve alike the finances, and the block in promotion, by offering civilians of thirteen to fifteen years' service a liberal pension if they will retire. This class of officers, having paid heavy sums to their annuity and other funds, naturally decline to go on the existing terms. Taking into account the pensions to which they are entitled, viz., £350 at fifteen years' service, and the large sums already subscribed by them towards their annuity, the Committee propose to grant a pension ranging from £500 to £700, according to their standing, if they will retire.

Another remedy deals with the grievance arising from the scanty employment of the North-West Civilians in the Non-Regulation Provinces. According to the rules originally laid down a certain proportion of the district appointments in the Punjab, Oudh, and Central Provinces was to be given to Bengal Civilians. These rules have been broken by the local heads of those provinces, each of whom appears to have reserved his patronage for remote connections by marriage, nephews, and the sons of friends. While the Secretary of State was sending out Civilians according to the scale required by the rules aforesaid, these rules were being steadily broken, and a large excess of Civil Servants was left in the Regulation Provinces. Some attempt has of late been made to put a stop to this state of affairs by a rule which provides that such appointments are to be made from the Civil Service, unless the Viceroy's previous sanction is obtained in favour of an outsider. It is now proposed to make this rule absolute, and to forbid the exercise of private patronage in favour of outsiders altogether, until the balance shall have been restored between the supply of Civilians and the demand for them in the Regulation Provinces of Bengal.

It is to be hoped that the remedies thus proposed will get rid of the evils we have pointed out, and that Mr. Lowe will not again come forward as the mouthpiece of grievances still awaiting redress. It appears that the Committee's Report confines itself to the grievances of North-West Civilians. These gentlemen no doubt are greater sufferers than their fellows in Bengal. But the latter also have some cause for complaint, as shown by Sir R. Temple in his recent Minute on the administration of his province. Sir Richard points out that, while his civil officers have rendered zealous and successful services, the just expectations of certain classes of them—expectations founded upon official and semi-official representations—have not been fulfilled. The very old and the very young sections of the Civil Service he considers fairly remunerated for their work. But there is an intermediate grade of officers who seem to him to have good reason to complain, a grade which specially includes those Civil Servants who went out in the over-crowded years of 1861-62. That the men of this class are of excellent quality, "in respect not only of intellectual training, but also of practical aptitude," Sir Richard is able confidently to affirm. But he goes on to describe their condition and prospects as unsatisfactory, and "below their just expectations." Such being the case, we hope that their claims to consideration will not be overlooked when the time comes for acting on the Report from which we have quoted.

PENSIONS OUT OF THE SALT TAX.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—There have been few Governments so reckless in granting pensions as the Indian Government has been since 1859. The grant of pensions appears to be the remedy for all its faults. The local army of India, which had won and preserved our Indian Empire, was destroyed, not by enemies, but by a friendly British Parliament, which appeared to have little knowledge of the history and topography of India, or of the temper of the various nations which inhabit it. The guilt of breaking up our heroic local army is supposed to have been condoned by bringing the private soldiers home, and by lavishing pensions among the officers.

On the 21st of June last you took up the question of the block in the Bengal Civil Service, and you brought to the notice of the public the fact that the arrangements so carefully made for preventing jobbery and improper patronage seem to have been set at naught. It is now reported that the aggrieved civil servants, who, after having won a position by competitive examinations, had been passed over by young men who had interest with the authorities, are to be silenced if not satisfied by the grant of good pensions; that is to say, young men in the prime of life, who have learnt the art of governing Hindoos and Mohammedans, who have for many years carefully studied the languages, wants and feelings of our Indian subjects, and who have qualified themselves to perform the arduous and responsible duties of a chief magistrate of a district, are to be cleared out of India, and condemned to idleness for the future unless they pick up some employment at home.

Pensions were intended for the aged, for the infirm, for widows and for orphans, and not for the young, well-educated, experienced and able-bodied, in order to stop their mouths and thus conceal the sins of government. Bad as the Governments of Turkey, Egypt, and the city of New York may be, they have not yet ventured upon wholesale grants of pensions to the able-bodied in order to convert them from being industrious and valuable public servants into drones, fattening upon money screwed out of millions of diseased paupers by means of an excessive salt tax.

Compare for an instant the reckless prodigality of the present Government of India with the wise economy of the East India Company. The Court of Directors bound themselves down by strict rules, by adherence to which they were enabled to overcome temptations to jobbery. A celebrated General once accused civilians of rioting in the plunder of the treasury; they could smile at his false and reckless assertions, so pure was the British administration in India in 1843.

So strict were the rules for pensions in England that a lady, the orphan daughter of a deceased Government servant, who had been granted a compassionate annuity of £32 a year, was unable to obtain an increase, although she humbly submitted that she could not live as a lady upon less than £40 a year.

Let a comparison be made between the pension lists of 1856 and 1875. The swollen extent of the latter will oblige the Government to borrow large sums every year, and will press like an incubus upon every Financial Minister who may honestly attempt to make the two ends meet. Pension lists increase with time, especially when pensions are granted to young men who are likely to live for forty or fifty years to come.—Your obedient servant,

T.

IRRIGATION IN THE BENGAL PRESIDENCY.—VII.

We before said that a canal head cannot be sunk in the ordinary way sufficiently low to secure perennial flow. It has hitherto been found impossible to excavate to a greater depth than 1 or 1½ feet below spring water level, owing to the water lying either in a stratum of quicksand, or of fine micaceous silt of such small specific gravity as to baffle all attempts at clearance to the depth required. There is a limit to this depth for reasons that will be explained further on, but that limit is certainly beyond 3½ feet below the river zero; leaving, therefore, two feet of excavation for which mechanical agency is requisite. Now canal excavation and clearance, even with cheap Indian labour, costs from 3s. to 6s. per 1,000 cubic feet, according to depth of bed below ground level, and the length of lead for depositing the spoil, and such clearance as that now referred to would, if possible, cost above the latter rate. A dredger, therefore, which would clear and keep clear that two feet of depth, which cannot possibly be cleared by manual labour, and which would thus enable a canal to continue irrigating twelve months in the year instead of only seven or eight months, would evidently work cheaply if it worked at the highest of the above rates. If such dredgers were also capable, on any occasion of desertion of a canal head, of reconnecting it promptly with the river, or of keeping it clear when being choked by the eating in of the river upon the bank above it, then such dredgers would remove the only raison d'être of sub-montane heads, and of weirs. They would render perennity of irrigation profitable, instead of being, as now, a scientific advantage purchased at a commercial loss.

With regard to depth below the winter zero of a river. A canal with its head 3·35 feet below the Sutlej zero in March, 1873, would have had the same depth of water (3·35 + ·85 feet) as the Bari Doab Canal in that month. The river average of March, 1873, was ·85 feet above zero, and the average depth of the Bari Doab Canal 4·20 feet. In January, 1875, the Bari Doab Canal had a depth of 2·88 feet, the greatest average recorded for that month during the last five years. The Sutlej was then at zero, and a canal, as above described, would consequently have been running deeper than the Bari Doab Canal. To work thus, up to the Bari Doab Canal standard, will answer all possible purposes, while to attempt more is dangerous. A canal of the same bottom breadth as the Agra Canal, and a gradient of six inches per mile, will retain its cross section in alluvial soil with water running at a depth of ten feet, but, where the bed is in silt—a frequent occurrence in the alluvial tracts—increasing depth and velocity causes scour to commence. Thus it has been found that when the depth in a canal (of the above size and gradient) was 12·40 feet on the bed as excavated, it had actually scoured to a depth of 8·20 feet below that bed, at a point where a cross section of the channel was taken and where the bed was silt. Of course all the earth scoured lodged further on. The area was increased by this scour from 864 to 1,100 superficial feet at the point of measurement, and, supposing an average increase of this amount for a distance of only a mile, there would be 1,250,000 cubic feet of silt to be removed from the canal beyond, which at 6s. per thousand cubic feet represents £250, a value not at all represented by the enhanced discharge in excess of the utmost supply which the canal is designed to utilise. This scour (which did not affect the sides of the canal) would then commence in a canal whose bed was in silt and four feet below the winter zero of the Sutlej, whenever that river rose to six feet above zero,—and it rises occasionally to ten feet above zero. This scour is counteracted on the great Narra Canal, in Sind, by lining the sides and bed with stone from the Sukkur rocks. On the Sutlej this would be far too costly, and 3·50 feet may therefore be assumed as the greatest depth below cold weather zero that canal heads from the Sutlej should be sunk, and being so sunk they will work up to the Bari Doab standard throughout the winter. During high floods the surplus depth of water, over and above the accepted working depth, would be let off to the river by suitable escapes.

A recent invention in dredges claims to have solved the problem by which mechanical power can be applied to canal excavation, and the beds of canals can thus be sunk to the desired depth. The method is by merely turning the oblong vessel now in use into a rhombic or triangular one; by projecting the line of excavating buckets beyond the bows, instead of having it, as at present, working nearly abeam; and by pivoting the hull, when working, upon one end of the base of the triangle or of the short diagonal of the rhombics. An additional method is, with a similar hull, to use, instead of excavating buckets, a suction pipe. This is let down on to the silt, which it disturbs and gets into solution, either by an agitation in the mouth of the pump, or by jets of water therefrom, and then sucks up and discharges on to the bank by means of a centrifugal pump.

By the change in shape greater breadth of beam is obtained for the same total dimensions, and by placing the machinery on the opposite side to the shoot, a degree of stability is acquired to counteract the weight of the latter, which permits of dispensing with the barge requisite in the case of ordinary dredgers for the purpose of supporting long shoots. Thus the side of the dredger can be brought in contact with the bank, and the hull, pivoted on the angle of the side, viz., the end of the short diagonal, works the nose of the dredger in arcs whose chord is equal to that diagonal. It thus eats its way into the silt or bank attached, in a succession of such arcs, either by the action of the chain of excavating buckets working 10 feet in front of the bows, or of the suction pipe projecting the same distance.

It is needless to go into a description of the mechanism; the engineering details are of course adapted to carry out the alterations in the principle of dredging and discharging silt which have been described. The main improvements obtained are as follows:—

(1.) The new type dredger working longitudinally makes a channel of its own extreme breadth as it goes. The old type required to be first floating in a channel, which it then proceeded to deepen, dredging crosswise (as working longitudinally it would evidently only make deep furrows).

(2.) The alteration in the shape of hull and arrangement of machinery permits of raising the spoil to a much greater height, and thus discharging it much further by its own weight, and also permits of having a much longer shoot in this view without requiring a barge for its support.

(3.) The pivot arrangement of the hull allows of so accurately working the buckets as to ensure their always working exactly on the desired point and always coming up full—thus saving the waste of power caused by their irregular action under the old system.

(4.) When the suction pipe is used instead of the excavating buckets, a further great improvement is found in dispensing altogether with the cumbersome and heavy shoot, and obtaining in its place a mode of discharge of silt far more effective, while the dredging agency is quite as much so, for ordinary silt, as that of buckets.

It has been before pointed out that if the work of excavation can be done by dredgers at 6s. per 1,000 cubic feet, it would be economical to employ them. A dredger of the new type, 50 feet beam, carrying engines of 25-horse power nominal, and drawing 2½ feet of water, is estimated to excavate and deliver 100,000 cubic feet of silt per day of ten hours. Let us say, however, 80,000 cubic feet, and allow twenty-five working days in the month, and we obtain about 22 000,000 cubic feet for eleven months' work (giving a month for intervals of repairs). The cost of such a dredger, floating in the Sutlej, would be £1,000 per nominal horse power, or £25 000; its working expenses £1,200 per annum; repairs, say, £300 per annum; interest on outlay and wear and tear, together, at 20 per cent., £5,000 per annum. This gives the total cost of 22,000,000 cubic feet of excavation as being £6,500, or about 6s. per mille. The dredgers would thus work within the highest rate per 1,000 cubic feet of excavation that is paid for manual labour, but at this rate they would perform work which manual labour cannot do—i.e., excavation below spring-water level, and clearance in a running canal—for which work, therefore, they should be reserved, and all possible excavation done by manual labour, at rates below 6s. per mille. In thus doing work which cannot be done by manual labour, at rates no greater than would be paid to manual labour for the same depth and lead of excavation, dredgers will render possible the vast saving in capital cost effected in constructing perennial canals at £1 per acre irrigated, as compared with £8. 16s. or £5. 18s., the cost of existing perennial canals, as shown at page 60.

To find how many such dredges would be required, we observe that the average amount of annual excavation is 205 cubic feet per irrigated acre (see p. 51). At least one third of this is in branches and distributaries, which the dredger could not reach, and which would be cleared more cheaply by manual labour. Taking, then, a dredger's duty at 140 cubic feet per acre, each dredger will suffice for canals irrigating an area of 157,142 acres, or for nearly two of the typical canals described further on. In case of accidents, however, and to meet occasions of pressure, such as disconnection of the head of a canal from the river—when it would be desirable to concentrate a squadron of dredgers—a dredger should be attached to every such canal. The cost need not be carried to the capital debit of the canal as the interest thereon, and the outlay on renewal of the dredgers themselves are both provided for in the 6s. per 1,000 cubic feet of excavation estimated as their working rate. It is, of course, understood that a dredger would always be kept earning this rate, when its services were not required by its canal in regulating the river by removal of sand banks, and thus reducing to a minimum occasions of pressure such as masking and disconnection of the canal head.

The statistics of a canal taken direct from the river, and so designed as to remain perennial and working up to the Bari Doab Canal minimum with the assistance of dredgers, will now be given. From these it will be seen that the cost falls somewhat below the 20s. an acre stated at p. 51. A canal of this nature would bear its full supply when the river had risen only 6·50 feet (its bed being 3·50 below the winter zero). This full supply for a canal of 75 feet bottom breadth, side slopes one to one, and slope of bed six inches per mile would be (on Bazin's theorem) 2,050 cubic feet per second, the mean summer supply would be 1,025 cubic feet, and that of the winter 471 cubic feet per second; and such a canal should expend itself in from 40 to 60 miles. The excavation may be roughly estimated as follows:—Main trunk from river up to the point where the canal would commence to work, and would be distributed into branches—length say 18¾ miles, depth of excavation at head and tail respectively 16 feet and 9 feet; with the bottom breadth and side slopes before given, the average sectional area is thus 1,106 superficial feet, which multiplied by the length gives 109,494,000 cubic feet of excavation. This excavation would be performed at an average of 5s. per mile. The actual outlay on such a canal, therefore, will be as follows:—

Excavation of main trunk, 18¾ miles	£27,373	10	0
Rolling and grass-facing ditto up to highest flood line at £70 per mile	1,312	10	0
Excavation of 90 miles of branches at an average of £200 per mile...	18,000	0	0
Distributories and sluices, say	20,000	0	0
Escapes, say	3,000	0	0
Engineering and contingencies at 2½ per cent.	1,742	3	0
Total	£71,428	3	0
Add for accumulated simple interest 20 per cent. on outlay	14,285	12	0
Grand total	£85,713	15	0

The irrigated acreage of this canal would be:—

	Acres.
Spring harvest, at 80 acres per cubic foot of water per second, on an average of crops	37,680
Autumn harvest, at 50 acres per cubic foot of water per second, on an average of crops	51,250
Total	88,930

N.B.—It will be seen by comparison with p. 26 how very moderately the above duties are assumed. In practice canals on this principle would never be constructed larger than the one described above. Such would get into gear and begin paying so much later than huge works of the discharge of the Bari Doab Canal as never to allow the accumulation of interest to the amount assumed—whereas on the present perennial canals it reaches 50 to 80 per cent. on the actual outlay.

The type of dredger described is the invention of the Superintendent of Irrigation of the Bhawulpur State, Mr. J. W. Barns, M. Inst. C.E., patented by him in conjunction with the engineering and shipbuilding firm of Simons and Brown, of Glasgow. It may not, of course, act up to expectation. It is merely instanced as pointing out the direction in which Government should look for securing certainty and perennity of irrigation at a remunerative price—having shown that those advantages are not so indispensable as to be worth securing at a commercial loss. The fact should be accepted that irrigation in the Bengal Presidency can only pay when canals are taken direct from the nearest point of a river which commands the land to be irrigated—without any attempt to dam or regulate that river. As such irrigation, under present conditions, must fall short of absolute perennity and permanency of supply—both of which are intrinsically very advantageous—some method should be sought for giving them both at a moderate cost. It appears certain that this method is to be found in the application of mechanical power to excavation and clearance—whether under the type patented by Barns, Simons, and Brown, or another. The demand will assuredly produce the article, if the Government of India in the Irrigation Department will make up its mind that this is what it wants, and make the fact known to the world.

P.S.—Since the above paper was written, the Government of India have published their review of the Irrigation Report of the North-West Provinces for 1873 74—commented upon therein.

The Government of India's review shows that the figures of the Report which we have already seen to be misleading, even if correct, are materially incorrect:—

"Para. 8. In the conclusions arrived at in para. 5 of the Resolution of the Local Government there appears to be some error. It is said that 'the profits from all sources exceeded the interest charges by Rs. 5,39,863,' but . . . the gain would appear to be only Rs. 384,066 . . . Again, it is said 'the accumulated interest charges exceeded the accumulated revenue by Rs. 80,99,002,' but the actual excess seems to be Rs. 92,97,688."

In other words, the Local Government is accused by that of India of over-estimating its profits for the year by £15 580, and of under-estimating the deficit on the total transactions of the canals since construction by £119,861!

Certainly, if the official reports of great Governments are liable to such mistakes it is very misleading for the general public, who are dependent thereon for the means of forming an opinion upon their transactions. But we fear that the Government of the North-West does but follow example, and that it might be said to that of India, "de te fabula narratur."

As we explained before, the general public is dependent upon the Gazettes for official information. Such as are not experts in irrigation matters will accept, with entire faith, the summary of the irrigation transactions of the various Governments, which is prefixed to the reports of those Governments printed in the Gazette of the Government of India. When, therefore, the Government of India's Summary—after giving a résumé of the figures of the North West Government report—states "this result, based on the cash collections, gives a net profit of 6 08 per cent. on the capital outlay—in the previous year it was 5·35 per cent., so that there is a satisfactory increase in the rate of return," the public naturally accepts this as an actual fact. The ordinary reader does not go on to ascertain for himself by actual ciphering that the net profit is not 6·08 per cent., but 3·76 per cent. He presumes that the Government understands the meaning of the words net profit, and he sees, from the strictures upon the figures of the local Government how scrupulous the superior Government is regarding literal accuracy, and how averse to over-favourable financial representations. Consequently he lays down the Gazette with a totally false impression regarding the financial success of the irrigation schemes in the North-West Provinces, and wonders at the rashly sweeping assertions of the Secretary of State.

But the fact is as stated; the net profits for 1873-74 on working canals, in the North-West Provinces, are not 6 08 per cent. but 3·76 per cent. Instead of giving a return exceeding the interest on their cost, they fall short of paying that interest.

The explanation is that the capital assumed for the calculation was the actual cash outlay of £3,036,813, neglecting the small item of £929,747 accumulated simple interest on that outlay. £929,747 is the aggregate of the amounts by which interest has exceeded the net returns (less working expenses) of the canals in each year since the canals were opened. It is that aggregate, without charging interest on each of those deficits from the date it accrued As has before been pointed out, each such deficit should, in point of fact, have been carried to capital debit when it occurred, and the interest charge should have been calculated each year on the capital account thus increased. However, such is not the practice of the Irrigation Department, who finance upon a peculiar principle. Nevertheless, even letting this pass, it is impossible to accept a calculation of profits which excludes even the accumulated simple interest from the capital on which such profits are calculated. The net return of the working canals of the North-West Provinces, for 1873-74 (deducting working expenses), was £184,670. The actual cash outlay on those canals to the end of that year was £3,036,843. The accumulated simple interest to the end of that year was £929,747. The total capital was, therefore, £4 908,911, on which the percentage of return is 3·76—not 6 08, as stated by the Government of India, or 6 71, as claimed by that of the North-West Provinces.

INDIA AND THE FOREIGN OFFICE.

The Pioneer looks on the appointment of Lord Lytton to the Viceroyalty as indicating that an English Cabinet is at last alive to the importance of those questions of foreign policy which are necessarily entrusted to the Government of India. We may hope also that the latter will again be permitted its due share in the conduct of affairs in Asia, which, though beyond the limits of its immediate influence, closely affect its interests. There appears, at last, a fair chance that India will in future neither be contemptuously left to settle matters with her neighbours in her own fashion, clogged with the provise that nothing is to be done to compromise the Ministry of the day, nor be forced to look on while her interests beyond her frontiers are deliberately sacrificed to party or bureaucratic exigencies. Mr. Disraeli having paid the diplomatic service of the Crown the compliment of selecting one of its members, necessarily unused to administrative functions, to rule the two hundred millions of her Majesty's Eastern Empire, Downing-street can hardly continue its refusal to employ Indian officers in Asiatic affairs, because they are unversed in the diplomatic wiles of Europe, or because their correspondence is not turned out in its own orthodox pattern. Some months ago we called attention to the way in which the £12,000 a year contributed by this country towards the expense (about £12,500 per annum) of maintaining a British Legation in Tehran is expended by the English Foreign Office. We pointed out at the same time that the recommendations of a committee of the House of Commons, that the control of relations with Persia should be transferred to India, or, at least, that their cost should be equally divided between the Home and Indian Treasuries, has been deliberately ignored. The natural reluctance of Earl Granville and Lord Hammond to relinquish patronage or increase their estimates, had more effect with the Duke of Argyll than the opinion of the House of Commons, of the office over which he presided, and of the Viceroy whom he had not nominated. The Tehran Legation is still paid by India, and officered and controlled by the Home Government. But the times when telegraph treaties and the squabbles about precedence at a racecourse were the most important business of her Majesty's representative at the Court of the Shah are at an end. The Turkish Empire is unmistakably crumbling into ruin, and no one can predict how far the shock of its fall will extend. It behoves England to be on the alert along the line. Lord Lytton will perhaps be able to induce his Foreign Office friends to replace one or two of the highly respectable but somewhat infirm old gentlemen who now represent English interests in Persia, by men of the type of Sheil and Rawlinson, whose reputation, still green in the land, attests their skill in oriental diplomacy, and who were always willing and able to ride their hundred miles a day. A Blue-book records that the first Russian expedition to Krasnovodsk, on the east coast of the Caspian, was made known to the British Legation at Tehran by a chance traveller, though it had been in preparation for months, and though an English consul was stationed at Resht, where there are no British subjects, apparently for the sole purpose of watching the Russians. We believe, however, that this official is not permitted to travel, either because it would cost so much, or for fear of exciting suspicion. A year later the virtual cession by Persia of her rights over the coast north of the Atrek, though the opinion of the British Minister was asked on it, was not reported by him for many months afterwards.

THE VALUE OF THE RUPEE.

The Englishman remarks that some years ago Prince Bismark determined that the new German Empire should have but one standard currency, and that this currency should be gold. By a gradual, but trenchant, process he has forced the German nations to exchange for gold the enormous masses of silver which formed their previous currencies. Vast sums in silver have thus been thrown on the international markets, and large sums in gold have been withdrawn from them; and the available supply of silver, therefore, has been abnormally plentiful, while the demand for gold has been unusually great. When the Anglo-Indian remits to England, he practically sells rupees and buys sovereigns. Of late years he has been selling a metal (silver) of which, for the time being, there is a glut in the market of the world, and buying a metal (gold) for which there has been an unusually heavy demand. Is there any sign of the tide turning? To this it must be answered that the Prussian measures for throwing their silver currency into the market and buying gold in its place consummate themselves during the present year. According to the official plan, we understand that from 1876 gold becomes the one legal currency in Germany. We do not yet know whether it has been found possible to carry out the measure in its entirety, or whether a further period of grace will have to be given, and still further supplies of silver be thrown upon the market during the next few days; but the resolute master-mind at the head of Prussian affairs, although he may grant a respite, will brook no long delay. The demonetising of the old German silver currency may be looked on as an accomplished fact, and we are now passing through the extreme point of the crisis. Unfortunately for the holder of Indian rupees, however, when Prussia sets an example of financial reform, other European States are apt to follow in her wake. The smaller Powers are imitating Prussia on a humbler scale, and everywhere throughout the civilised world there is a tendency towards a single currency, and that single currency is gold. With regard, therefore, to one great set of causes which have of late depressed the value of silver, it may be said that the most important of them will presently cease to act, but that it leaves behind it a tendency towards reproducing itself in many, although minor forms. If no new silver mines are discovered, Asia will very soon use up the surplus silver which Prussia has thrown into the European markets, and its value, as expressed in gold, will rise. Again, if the Indian cotton manufacturers were to develop on a scale to exclude Manchester goods, while at the same time our exports to England, such as tea and jute, increased, the exchange value of the rupee would rise. There appears at present a sufficient likelihood of this to render it an element in any forecasts of the future. On the other hand, if the silver mines in America realise but a small part of the hopes of their discoverers, there is no limit to the fall in the price of silver. If, instead of Emma mines, the New York projectors would bring bonâ fide veins of silver within the reach of English investors, the value of the rupee might very easily fall to a shilling. But against this contingency must be set our own chances of successfully working the gol dreefs of Maisur and Southern India. And, so far as we can form an opinion, our prospects of gold-digging in India are quite as good and as immediate as the prospects of extended silver mining in America.

SEPOY'S UNIFORM.

The Madras Athenæum regrets that the dirzees who cut out Johnny Sepoy's cloth have very singular notions about the line of manly beauty, and the result is a dress for our native soldiers as ugly and awkward looking as it is foreign to their nature; in fact, to one who notices them daily, they appear as if they find their clothes a burden, and remind one of the saying "a dog in a wet sack." Now this is a matter which might be remedied easily, and that not only without extra expense, but actually at a saving to Government, by making the sepoy's uniform more oriental in character, and assimilating it more to his own national dress. The time-honoured red need not be departed from, but the material and shape might be altered to very great advantage;—a uniform somewhat after the pattern of our West Indian Regiments would be every way suitable, being lighter and giving greater scope for free use of the limbs, and we feel sure that, just as it has been found to the great gain of our European troops to improve on the old-fashioned coatees, so would reform in this respect be most beneficial to our native soldiers. How often on the march, or on heavy field how do they fall out in numbers out of all proportion to the work done? And this may be ascribed in some measure to scanty diet, plenty of them when asked will say their faintness or fatigue to the (for them) unusually heavy clothing they wear. A native wearing a similar closely buttoned cloth coat from choice in any bazaar would be laughed at by his fellows, and why should our faithful servants be punished by being clothed so directly in opposition to their tastes? Even the heavy boots they wear are only a burden, sufficient to make them drag their weary feet along in any but a soldierlike fashion; and the light forage caps worn in some native corps do not offer the slightest protection against sunstroke, although natives are liable to the coup-de-soleil. The substitution of a loose jacket of serge or other light material for the cloth tunic would answer all purposes as to appearance, because the colour (red) could still be adhered to, and the cloth trousers now in use might be replaced by loose, baggy knickerbockers of the "Zouave" pattern; whilst the adoption of a well-made sandal in lieu of the ammunition boot, together with a distinguishing turban such as our police peons wear, would complete a costume at once appropriate, characteristic, and suitable to its wearers, besides being obtainable at far less cost than that which now obtains. It is absurd to say that sepoys could not march without their "ammunitions;" to men who have never worn a boot it is simply severe punishment to compel them to case their feet in such a tough substance as Government leather, and only cripples and impedes their locomotion; the soles of their feet are hardened so as to be almost impervious to sharp substances, and wearing boots softens this outer skin and does them more harm than good. Again, as a protection against wet or cold, the cloth tunic or trousers is not the kind of garment a sepoy would select from choice; he would always look for some loose outside wrapper, such as the overcoats now supplied to him by Government, but would still adhere to his own lighter clothing underneath. Another recommendation for the adoption of a more suitable uniform is that when any article required replacing at the sepoy's own expense it would not be such a heavy drain on his slender resources; for, like his uniform, the present rate of pay he receives is the relic of a bygone day, when those in authority studied a soldier's personal interest much less than now, and cared nothing for those under them so long as the decrees of that power which made demi-gods of themselves were strictly adhered to.

THE LATE CAPTAIN WORSTER.—The Agra paper reports the death, on the 13th instant, at Mhau, of Captain W. F. Worster, of the 108th Regiment. Captain Worster joined the regiment in 1857, and served through the Indian Mutiny Campaign, for which he obtained a medal.

ACCIDENT TO A PILGRIM SHIP.—The following telegraphic news has been received by the Underwriters' Association, Bombay, from Aden, 28th January:—"Dahlia (s.s.), Captain Joy, bound to Bombay with pilgrims, struck on a reef when leaving Jeddah, and made a hole forward; was being patched at Aden, and would leave in a few days."

THE NATIVE TROOPS AT THE DELHI REVIEW.—As regards physique I think the men of the 2nd battalion 12th showed to great advantage, but what struck me as worthy of particular notice was the magnificent appearance of the native troops. The improvement which has taken place in this respect during the past three years is really marvellous. I heard it said that the regiments I was looking at and praising were picked ones, which had been posted to the Camp of Exercise to let the Prince and our foreign visitors see the best of the Native Army. I know that this was not the case. A regiment of the Central India Horse and the 1st Punjab Infantry were ordered to the Camp as representative regiments, but all the others were present according to the arrangements which had been made in connection with the annual course of reliefs. The native regiments on the ground were fair specimens of all the classes which take military service under our rule. There were purely class regiments, such as the Gurkha battalions, Rattray's Sikhs, and the 32nd Pioneers—Muzbee Sikhs; there was the 8th N.I., composed of Rajputs, Hindustanis, Pathans, and Sikhs; there were frontier regiments from the Panjab, and regiments like the 11th and 33rd N.I., which had a general mixture of all classes in their ranks. There was no picking of regiments for this particular show—a fact which, I hear, that Mr. Forbes, the "special" of the London Daily News, declines to accep, but which is fact nevertheless. I was certainly very much struck with the wonderful improvement in appearance, setting up, and movement of the whole native force, but especially of the Infantry. The native officers and non-commissioned officers seemed to know and do their work better. The men handled their arms with greater confidence and precision, for which, possibly, the much-abused Musketry Instruction has to be thanked. Colonel Gordon has had to bear no little reproach from public scribblers about the supposed disorganisation he was causing in the ranks of the Native Army by his musketry regulations. His calumniators had only, however, to look at the native regiments on Wednesday last, to be satisfied that the system has worked wonders. Colonel Gordon's best vindication was the appearance of the native regiments at the review.—Englishman Correspondent, Jan. 19.

Bengal, Upper India, &c.

AMRITSAR, MIANMIR, AND LAHOR.

The entrance into the Punjab is in one way advantageous: it is so hideous that all progress must be towards the better. The country, until within a short distance of Amritsar, combines the fascinations of a desert and a swamp. Accordingly Amritsar itself appears a garden of Eden on the strength of a considerable number of fairly-grown trees, and some patches of grass, which are almost more green than grey. The roads moreover are good, and the houses—I mean the European houses—seem substantial and large. On the principle of de mortuis, &c., I ought to say nothing at all of the city, for it is dead, its trade having migrated to Delhi, in consequence, I am told (but do not understand) of the Franco-Prussian war; and I am sure I can say nothing good. The famous fort of Govindgarh is commonplace-looking, hardly worth taking, I should have thought, or keeping. The streets of the city are narrow and dirty enough, but are not picturesque. Even the Golden Temple and Sacred Tank are impostures. The latter is just a "tank;" and as for the former—if you have seen a gilt race-cup you have seen its exterior, and if you looked into a Cashmere shawl you are acquainted with the decoration of its interior. I don't mean that race-cups are commonly cast in the form of Hindu (or Sikh) temples; but that whatever merit the Golden Temple possesses being due, not to grandeur of size or grace of proportion, so much as to the barbaric richness of its gilt sheathing: when you have once assimilated the fact that the whole building is cased in copper gilt, you may ruminate into reverence at your ease. Your admiration will be a mere matter of arithmetic and finance. On reflection, I feel that my impression of Amritsar was a little darkened and distorted by the temporary loss of my luggage—an accident which affected me with a keener sense of personal wrong than it should have done, considering that travellers by this railway (at any rate at this season) look upon it as quite natural and ordinary. I will, therefore, be candid enough to allow that the Golden Temple of Amritsar, seen in a photograph, is pretty, though looked at with the reflected sun blazing me into blindness, I could not appreciate the gingerbread for the gilt.

Mian Mir should be, and no doubt is, an unequalled training ground for soldiers. Government is quite right in retaining it as a chief military station. It may be given over permanently to fever, and occasionally depopulated by cholera; it still remains a matchless nursery for warriors. The roughest and bloodiest campaign must be a perfect holiday to men who have been condemned to live (if it can be called life) at Mian Mir. Trees very excusably decline to grow there; the few that have been decoyed into existence show a foliage like green flue; and even the bungalows despond and decay. Many of them are in ruins, and the rest do not look much more cheerful. The roads, however, are broad and smooth, and terribly straight and long, suggesting how very long the hot-weather days must be passed in their shadeless border.

Lahor is a very different place; it is an idyll of the king compared to the multiplication table. That one man should be rich and another poor, or that one woman should be pretty and her sister plain is not half so grave an indictment against Providence as that one regiment should be stationed at Anarkalli and the next in the Army List at Mian Mir. The roads of Lahor are as good as those of Mian Mir, and, thank Heaven! not all at right angles. The houses look trim and cared for, as if enchanted courtships and happy wedded life might be found in them. There are patrician trees, and plenty of them, under which old Runjeet Singh must have passed with his train of elephants, and of chieftains in chain armour, &c.; and the beauty of the thing is that the elephants with their golden howdahs and the silk horsemen with their chain neck-pieces, are here still crossing every road, although Runjeet has gone and his sad prophecy has come to pass—Sub lal ho gya. As for the fort, I don't know what engineers may think of it, but every artist would pronounce it perfect. I am sure Turner would have painted it from the nor-nor-west and the sou-sou-east, and from as many quarters as Mr. Pecksniff (or his pupils) drew Salisbury Cathedral. I never saw a more picturesque place—no two towers are of the same height or form, yet the lowest portion of the vast construction is lofty, and the meanest grand.—Pioneer Correspondent.

MR. J. DANVERS.—Mr. Juland Danvers and Mr. Rendall, of the E. I. R. Direction, arrived in Calcutta by special train on Friday, January 14th, and are the guests of the Viceroy at Government House. It is said that their object is the consideration of the possibility of Government purchasing the East Indian Railway, and taking it over on or about 1879.—Indian Daily News.

THE BEGAM OF BHOPAL.—The Begam of Bhopal, according to the Times' version of the affair, "astonished every one" at Calcutta "by breaking through the seclusion of her sex to pay her respects to the son of her Sovereign. She came closely veiled, of course, but her mere appearance in an assembly of men is a singularly bold departure from the rigidity of Eastern etivuette." The officers of the Foreign Department at Calcutta who were so much troubled by the Begam's unexpected relapse on the etiquette she was thought to have abandoned will enjoy the exquisite fidelity of this little vignette.—Pioneer.

MEDICAL.—A contemporary says:—"Dr. McDermott is again before the world. It will be remembered that he is the selfish officer who stood in the way of sixty seniors in his branch of the service wishing to withdraw from the medical fund, but unable to do so while he refused to give a certain guarantee to the Government. He was asked to promise that he would not claim pecuniary advantages which might, by an unforeseen interpretation of the rules, accrue to him if his seniors retired, advantages which he had not paid for and had no moral right to expect. Dr. McDermott has at last been circumvented, but at the individual expense of Drs. Morice and DeFabeck. A resolution in the Financial Department, dated the 22nd, explains the arrangement made."

THE LATE CAPTAIN BUTLER.—The following appears in the last Gazette of India:—"The Viceroy and Governor-General in Council has received with deep regret the intelligence of the death, on the 7th January, 1876, of Captain J. Butler, Political Agent of the Naga Hills, from the effects of a spear wound which he received on Christmas Day while accompanying a survey party into the Naga Hills. Captain Butler had only recently rendered very efficient service while attached to the expedition which was organised for the punishment of the Naga villages concerned in the treacherous attack on Lieutenant Holcombe and his party, and on that occasion had fully sustained his previous reputation as an active political officer. In him the Government of India has lost an able servant, whose career, thus prematurely cut short, was full of promise."

PRIVATE EXECUTIONS.—A set of rules has been approved of by the Bengal Government concerning private executions. In the North-West Provinces private executions were introduced for a while by the late Mr. Colvin, and they have been revived by the present Government. Twenty years ago there was some strange opposition to the private system, one sessions judge declaring there was no evidence to show that at public executions the spectators were brutalised, unless, indeed, the picking and stealing that went on was evidence of spontaneous corruption. Last year the experiment of 1856 was tried again, rules were drawn up for the conduct of executions in the North-West Provinces, and these rules, mutatis mutandis, have been borrowed by the Government of Bengal for use in Calcutta. The Presidency Jail will have to be slightly altered at a cost of Rs. 1,206, as a scaffold and enclosure will have to be built within the jail precincts.

CIVIL CHANGES IN BENGAL.—A resolution in the Calcutta Gazette says that, consequent on the arrangements necessitated by the constitution of the Chief Commissionership of Assam, and by the transfer to that administration of the district of Silhet, there has been a reduction, as regards appointments under the Government of Bengal, of one first-grade and of one second-grade judgeship. On the other hand, two additional judgeships, on Rs. 1,200 each, have been created, one in the districts of Darjiling and Jalpiguri, and one in the district of Chittagong. The number of appointments, therefore, in the judicial executive branches of the service is now as follows:—Fourteen first-grade judges on Rs. 2,500 per mensem, fourteen second-grade judges on Rs. 2,000 per mensem, two additional judges on Rs. 1,200 per mensem, fifteen first-grade magistrate and collectorships on Rs. 2,250 per mensem, fifteen second-grade magistrate and collectorships on Rs. 1,800 per mensem, and seven third-grade magistrate and collectorships on Rs. 1,500 per mensem, including the senior superintendent of survey.

THE MAGH MELA.—Every sixth and twelfth year the annual Magh Mela at the junction of the Ganges and Jumna swells out into a fair of grand proportions. The twelfth is the grandest of all. The principal exhibition of the sixth Mela took place on Wednesday last. From an early hour in the morning the roads leading to the Fort from the English station, from Kydgunge, the city, and Dahragunge, were crowded with pilgrims. The pathways leading across to the bund, and from that to Tribenee were adorned with more than the usual complement of filthy, ochre-faced jogees buried up to the neck in sand; mal-formed beggars; and mal-formed cows. Unfortunately the Pragwals and their customers had more dust than they bargained for. Occasional gusts of wind threw over the whole ground in front of the Fort and over Tribenee itself a sand-fog as dense as any mist experienced by Londoners in November, and infinitely more disagreeable. Like the Prince of Wales and the native chiefs at Agra, the jogees at Tribenee have had their elephant procession; and right royally have they carried it through.—Pioneer, Jan. 29.

THE BLACK PAMPHLET.—Its perusal has convinced me that if ever statesman deserved notice from Royal hands, Sir Richard Temple has done so. The author of the pamphlet says that during the supposed famine Sir Richard squandered recklessly or ignorantly eight and a half millions sterling. Horace talks of a man who then coin as being either "prodigus" or "[illegible]." But it is well known that Sir Richard is not one of these. I have heard the description given of Catiline by Sallust applied to him:—"Sui profusus, ardens in cupiditatibus, satis loquentiœ, sapientiœ parum." But this was the opinion of an enemy. I should think that the man who can evolve a famine out of the depth of his own consciousness, and get the public to pay eight and a half millions to support his idea, is a man worth remembering. Let him be rewarded. Distinguished rewards sometimes convey hidden meanings. When the Horse Guards asked Sir Charles Napier what ought to be done with General England, after blundering as he did in India, the hero replied—"Try him by a General Court Martial, or make him a K.C.B." The Government adopted the latter recommendation, and General England became "Sir Richard." Why should not our Lieutenant Governor be made a baronet?—Englishman Correspondent.

INDIAN CIVIL ENGINEERS.—We learn from Indian Public Opinion that a prospectus is now in course of circulation among the Civil Engineers of the P. W. D., with the object of ascertaining the feeling of the department as to whether they are in favour of establishing a retiring fund for the civil and military members, to be based upon the principles of one of the funds now in operation in other branches of the service. In the event of the suggestion finding favour with both branches of the department, it is intended to ask Government to sanction a scheme of retirement after a stated period of service, which, in conjunction with the fund, would hold out an inducement to members of the higher grades to retire, and so accelerate promotion. About 12 per cent of the civil members of the department have joined the Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund, and the inference is that this fund does not meet the wants of the department, and that only the most prudent married members of the department have joined it. There are others, particularly among the married members, who have effected policies of insurance on their lives, which could not be set aside, and whose co-operation would be of immense value in organising a scheme. A primary condition of the fund would be compulsory support from future admissions in the department, and this the Government would be asked to initiate.

ARMY REORGANISATION.—We have so often seen something very like the following paragraph which we take from a contemporary, that we cannot say we attach any importance to it. It runs thus:—"When the Camp of Exercise disperses, his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will return to Calcutta for a final discussion of the scheme for the improvement of the Native Army." Now this statement of the Pioneer that a "final" discussion is to take place implies that the matter is all but settled as far as the Indian authorities are concerned, and that before long the public may be in possession of the details. Secondly, it will be observed that the scheme is no longer described as one of reorganisation, but merely of "improvement." We are tired of pointing out that as long as Lord Napier of Magdala is at the head of the army, there is no chance of any comprehensive scheme of reform. What instructions his successor, Sir F. Haines, may bring out from England is quite another matter, and military men must wait patiently for his action in this difficult question. Much was expected from Lord Northbrook when he first came to India, but he is now going home without making any sign. When he visited Poona at the end of 1872 he seemed full of the subject, and at the ball given in his honour at Government House, Gunnesh Khind, he had a long conversation with a well-known officer of the Bombay Army, asking him his views of the matter, listening to his answers with much apparent interest, and putting pertinent and searching questions as to points of interior economy, dress, &c. Still nothing has come of it, and his successor, Lord Lytton, though he has a reputation as a graceful poet and brilliant diplomatist, has not yet evinced any interest in Army reform. We consider that a very great deal depends on the view of the question which Sir Frederick Haines will take when in power.—Times of India.

MUNICIPAL.—A Rangoon paper tells us that Government has sanctioned a loan of Rs. 2,70,000 to the Rangoon Municipality, with interest at the rate of only 2½ per cent.

A NEW CABLE.—The Eastern Extension, Australasia and China Telegraph Company have, the Straits Times tells us, decided to lay down a duplicate cable between Penang and Madras. This is satisfactory, as evidencing an increased traffic over the line, which, it is hoped, may ultimately lead to a reduction in the rates. It has not yet been definitely announced, but it is probable the second cable will be laid between Penang and Rangoon.

A HANDSOME FINE.—Mr. Nelson, the District Judge of North Tanjor, has put a nice little plum into the exchequer of the Madras Government, in a way that is worthy of notice elsewhere. At the recent Sessions at Negapatam, a rich abkarry contractor was arraigned for having tampered with the date of a document, and the offence having been brought home to him, the Court imposed upon him one day's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 10,000, in default of paying which he was to undergo two and a quarter years' imprisonment. The heavy fine was paid.

OFFICIAL BLUNDERING.—The Madras Times states that arrangements incident to the transport of H.M's 89th Regiment to Burmah have involved the loss of some forty-two thousand rupees to the Local Government, by reason of an engagement being entered into with the British India Steam Navigation Company, to convey the 89th Regiment to Burmah, and the 67th Regiment from Burmah, without previously ascertaining whether these movements could or could not be effected by means of transports belonging to the State, and available for such purpose. This circumstance, it would seem, only turned up on inquiry being made by the Government of India as to how it was proposed to effect the movements of these two corps—when an apology for the oversight became necessary, in connection with cancelling of the bargain that had been concluded with the agents of the B.I.S.N. Company here.

MARRIAGE OF A VETERAN.—A correspondent writes to Madras from Bangalor:—One of the events of the day lately has been the recent marriage of one of the oldest Generals of the Madras Army—more than an octogenarian, in fact—General Cleveland, the founder of Cleveland Town here, who was of course born before the commencement of the present century, he having entered the service in 1808. The General is hale and hearty at the present time, and has always been held in great esteem. He has set an example which some of our younger old bachelors in high places would perhaps do well to imitate. The marriage was solemnised very quietly one afternoon at St. John's Church, St. John's Hill, and the news took every one quite by surprise the next morning.

THE KARENNI BOUNDARY.—It may be remembered that the King of Burmah gave in without opposition to Sir Douglas Forsyth on the question of the Karenni Boundary, and that we congratulated ourselves at the time for having so satisfactorily got over one of the principal points of dispute. From what we hear now, however, it seems that it is by no means improbable that we shall meet with a certain amount of trouble and opposition when we proceed to mark out the newly acquired boundary. The Deputy Commissioner of Tonghoo, than whom nobody is more competent to judge, is said to be of opinion and to have so reported to Government, that the Boundary Commission which is to start from Tonghoo about the 25th January will not be allowed to peacably carry out their work, and that the King of Burmah will be at the bottom of any disturbances which may arise. The Boundary Commission—which consists of Messrs. Hildebrand, Assistant Commissioner, Jameson, Police, and Lloyd, R.E.—will be accompanied by a body of 150 policemen, and a further force of 50 police under a European Inspector will be stationed on the frontier as a reserve. No troops, however, will be sent.—Madras Athenæum.

THE RESIDENT OF HAIDARABAD.—A good deal has been written lately about Mr. Saunders' so-called removal from the Residentship of Hyderabad. As a matter of fact, we believe, Mr. Saunders has not been removed, or anything like it. Private affairs, unhappily, necessitated his taking leave; but for that he would have remained undisturbed. No officer, we imagine, has any substantive claim upon such a post, no matter how long he may have occupied it. Sir Richard Meade once installed as Mr. Saunders' temporary successor at Hyderabad, a conviction of the great disadvantage of frequent changes in the personnel of the weightiest political charges—as evidenced in the retention of Mr. A. C. Lyall in Rajpootana, when every one out of power thinks he should act for Mr. Aitchison in the Foreign-office—will probably keep him there, leaving Mysore open to Mr. Saunders on his return. Mysore, all told, is perhaps a shade the more desirable appointment of the two. If honour and glory are to count, it is, of course, something of a sleepy hollow, as compared with Hyderabad; but the pay of both posts is about the same, Mysore being the less costly one to occupy; whilst it is appraised rather the more highly in respect of official consideration.—Pioneer.

NEWS FROM THE STRAITS.—His Excellency the Governor of the Straits Settlements was still at Penang on the 13th Jan., but intended leaving on Saturday, the 15th, for Malacca, where he would remain some days on business connected with the Native States. It is not known when he will return to Singapore, but his presence is urgently needed there. The condition of the public service is now extremely unsatisfactory, the Straits Times remarks, the numerous acting appointments and constant temporary makeshifts having seriously impeded the conduct of public business. The appointment of Colonial Secretary has been given to Mr. J. Douglas, of the Ceylon Civil Service, who will not, however, immediately assume his duties, though it is so necessary that this office should be speedily filled. The Hon. T. Braddell has returned to the colony as Attorney General, and Mr. Justice Phillippo will revert to his office as Puisne Judge; Mr. F. H. Gottlieb has resumed his duties as Crown Solicitor, and the temporarily created office of Deputy Attorney General has ceased to exist. On the arrival of the new Colonial Secretary, the Auditor General and Assistant Colonial Secretary will probably return to the duties of their respective offices. It is also rumoured that the Hon. C. B. Plunket will return to his substantive appointment of Inspector General of Police, Major Dunlop, R.A., rejoining the service.

THE GOVERNOR.—The Duke of Buckingham is winning golden opinions, and it would seem that we have verily got in him a Governor who is not going to let the grass grow under his feet in doing his duty. Scarcely has he completed his tour through a district which has never before but once been visited by a Governor, and personally inspected some of the most important irrigation works in this Presidency, when he has made another trip up-country with a view to seeing things for himself. Cuddapah has been the district honoured this time. His Grace proceeded thither by special train on Wednesday, accompanied by Colonel Shaw-Stewart, Consulting Engineer for Railways; Mr. Elwin, Agent and Manager of the Madras Railway; Mr. Robinson, Acting Chief Engineer, Madras Railway; Major Bertie Hobart, Military Secretary to his Grace; Captain Aylmer, Aide-de-Camp to his Grace; and Dr. King; and he returned to Madras on the following day, after inspecting several bridges, the most important of which were the Paupagni and the Cheyair, both of which his Grace very minutely observed, devoting some considerable time to their inspection. It is said that his Grace intends making a trip to Calcutta in a few days, returning to Madras via Hyderabad, and the report is gaining ground that he contemplates visiting the southern districts of the Presidency after a short stay on the hills.—Madras Times, Jan. 29.

ADUNKI CATTLE SHOW.—Among the things neglected or put off is our Annual Cattle Show at Adunki. This for some reason (some of the natives say, "because the son of the Great Queen has come to India") is not to occur this year. The reason given by the natives I cannot credit; and the rumour even causes some, I fear, to wish that H.R. Highness had never come at all. However that may be, the putting off of the show at Adunki, for one year even, is a great mistake. Hundreds of natives, not only of this district, but of the Kristna District also, looking upon the show as an established thing, have been planning and preparing for it for years. Those who know the natives, and know how easily they are discouraged, will readily see that it will take some time and effort to restore the confidence which they have now lost in the show and cause them to put forth again the efforts which will be necessary on their part to make the "Adunki Cattle Show" what it ought to be and might be—a success and a power. Since the cattle shows were inaugurated in this district in 1859, first and second-class cattle of all kinds have increased in value threefold, and in numbers many times that. These noble animals, such as are found in no other part of India or the world, are sought by breeders in Columbo, Tanjore, and Travancore. Whole herds of them are driven to Madras, Bangalore, Bellary, and Kurnool. Two or three weeks ago I was coming from the latter place to Ongole via the Nundy Cunnama Pass. In coming a distance of eighty miles I met several droves, containing over 1,000 head of young cattle, from the Nellore and Krisna Districts, mostly from the Nellore District. In one herd there were 400, most of them superior animals.—Madras Athenæum Correspondent.

STATION TALK.

RAJKOT, Jan. 19.—In Wudwan public affairs are at a stand-still. No one is yet appointed to succeed Mr. Naradbhai. During the minority of Thakore Daji Raj, a boy of great pluck and intelligence, his mother urged upon the Bombay Government to appoint Rajeshree Gunputrao Bhasker, a man in whom she had trust and confidence, as the Thakore's representative in the management of the State. The antecedents of Mr. Gunputrao are not known, but as far as my information goes he is a man of good breeding, tact, and experience; he is also believed to possess a good knowledge of English.—Mr. Chester Macnaghten, Principal of the Rajkoomar College, is going for the benefit of his health on eight months' furlough to England, in the beginning of April next. In his absence Mr. M. A. Turkhud, Vice-Principal, will probably act for him. Mr. Macnaghten, it must be said, is not only popular with the Rajkoomars under his tutorial care, but with the whole of the Kattywar public. His urbanity, as well as his extremely good disposition, has endeared him to every one with whom he has come in contact. Thakore Juswunt Singhjee, of Limree, intends to accompany him to England. The young Thakore, though he has not attained his political majority, has already much of the prudence and sagacity of a grown up man. He cannot certainly find a better companion and guardian than Mr. Macnaghten. It is generally understood that for political convenience Babariawad, a Mohammedan State, enjoying second class jurisdiction, in the south of Kattywar, will be transferred from the present Chief to the British, and that country of equal area, and perhaps yielding equal revenue, will be given him in exchange, near Junjeera. For the ruler of Junjeera and of Babariawad is the same. This will be a fair exchange. Whether the Hubshee has consented to this arrangement or not has not yet transpired. The State is very fertile. Its capital town, Jafferabad, is the largest seaport in the Peninsula of Kattywar. The State was originally founded some centuries ago by the great Seedhee of Junjeera, who was a distinguished naval officer of the Moguls. The Hubshee of Jafferabad and Junjeera pays no tribute to anybody.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

LEGISLATION.—We had strong hopes, from our recent Calcutta telegram, respecting the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Bill, that the Supreme Government would fully recognise the propriety of abandoning the Bill. It has, however, been decided that the Bill shall become law, with the following modification only, "that the revenue officers shall in certain cases obtain the opinion of the High Court, and that the High Court shall be bound to give its opinion when so referred to." Such appears to be the Secretary of State's ultimatum.—Times of India.

CAPTAIN PRIDEAUX.—As has been before reported, it is now definitely decided that Captain W. F. Prideaux is to act as Political Resident in the Persian Gulf during the absence of Colonel Ross, who goes home on furlough in the early spring. We are glad that our interests in the Gulf will be entrusted to such good hands. Captain Prideaux is not only an excellent Arabic scholar, but from his long experience in Aden has acquired great tact in dealing with the petty chieftains of the Arab littoral. It is probable that the "diversions" of that incomprehensible gentleman, Syed Turki, may give him much trouble; but when we remember the decided and energetic way in which he dealt with similar difficulties while acting as Consul-General at Zanzibar in 1874, we are confident that he will be found fully prepared for any contingency.

ANTICIPATED RETIREMENTS IN THE BOMBAY ARMY.—It is currently reported that the following regiments of native infantry will become vacant this year, either by their commandants becoming entitled to the off reckonings, or going under the new retirement scheme:—2nd Grenadier N.I., now commanded by Colonel Faulkner; 5th N.L.I., by Colonel W. W. Taylor; 12th N.I., by Colonel Champion; 13th N.I., by Colonel Marston; 15th N.I., by Colonel Kemball; 20th N.I., by Colonel Bacon; 22nd N.I., by Colonel Jacob. Of seconds in command likely to take the scheme, we hear the following names mentioned:—Colonel Bowen, 3rd N.L.I.; Lieut.-Colonel Pierce, 10th N.I.; Lieut.-Colonel Park, 12th N.I.; Lieut.-Colonel Currie, 15th N.I.; Lieut.-Colonel Miles, 16th N.I.; Lieut.-Colonel Creagh, 19th N.I.; Lieut.-Colonel Rice, 20th N.I.; Colonel Waddington, 23rd N.I. Of those regimentally unemployed, we hear the following mentioned:—Colonels G. Ashburner, E. Thompson, Graham, Milford, and Prescott. It is said that the number of applicants to retire this year amounts to about thirty, and we shall not be surprised if this rumour turns out to be correct.—Times of India.

THE DAKHAN RAYATS.—We understand that the Dakhan Rayats' Commission, which was sitting at the Bombay Secretariat for some weeks past, having closed its labours, was formally dissolved on Friday last. It will be remembered that the commission was appointed in September last, to inquire into and report on the causes of the agrarian disturbances which had broken out in Poona and the neighbouring districts. The members constituting it were Mr. Richey, Mr. Colvin (Secretary to the Board of Revenue, N.W. Provinces), Mr. Lyon, and Mr. Shumbuprasad Luxmilal. While the inquiry was in progress Mr. Colvin had to leave, and was succeeded by Mr. Carpenter. The members of the commission travelled into the disturbed pergunnahs, and having held inquiries on the spot, came to Bombay to deliberate on the remedial measures to be adopted for the future. The result of these deliberations has not yet transpired. It is rumoured, however, that a diversity of opinion having prevailed amongst the members, each member has recorded his own views as to what he considered the most efficacious remedies to meet the existing condition of things. We trust the Government of Bombay will see fit to place in due time all the papers connected with the inquiries of the Dakhan Rayats' Commission at the disposal of the press, for the public instruction.—Times of India, Jan. 31.

DEATH OF SIR R. MORGAN.—(COLOMBO, Jan. 28.)—Sir Richard Morgan, Queen's Advocate, chief law adviser, and head of the Eurasian community, died last night. The place is most difficult to fill, from the complicated system of the island's laws.—Times of India Correspondent.

ACCIDENT TO A STEAMER.—The Italian steamer Genoa, in passing by Galle on the evening of the 18th Jan., struck on the Dallugalla rock in the road, about four miles from the lighthouse point, where she now lies. The master attendant, Mr. Blyth, proceeded at once on board, and several boats made off to the ship. The cargo of tea and opium is now being discharged. The Ceylon Times of the 19th ult. publishes a telegram from Galle as follows:—The steamer Genoa, which struck on the Whale Reef at half-past five yesterday afternoon, is now fast breaking up. She is submerged in water, only the masts and bow being visible. The steamer Arrow, of the Trinity House, went to the spot this morning, but returned to the harbour, as she could not afford any assistance. Part of the cargo was discharged last night and to-day. COLOMBO WATER SUPPLY.—A despatch has been received from Lord Carnarvon, by his Honour administering the Government, approving of the scheme for a water supply for Colombo. The chairman of the Municipality was in expectation that he would be in a position to lay the whole subject fully before the Council on Tuesday afternoon, but was not favoured with papers in time to allow of his doing so. He trusts to be able to bring the matter forward for the information of the Council at the next meeting. We understand that the scheme, which has received the sanction of the Colonial-office, is a modification of Mr. Burnet's plan, and that the modifications that are drafted are made on the authority of eminent London engineers. We are further informed that it has been intimated to the Colonial Government that the Home Secretary looks to having the whole work carried out for £205,000.—Ceylon Times.

THE NEW CHIEF JUSTICE.—The error into which many persons fell, as to the name of the new Chief Justice of Ceylon, arose from the circumstance that the first intimation of the appointment mentioned the new Judge as "the Chief Justice of the Bahamas." The latest Colonial-office List in the Colony gives the name of that dignitary as Sir W. H. Doyle, the Attorney-General being Sir George C. Anderson, a name by no means fondly cherished in the memories of old residents in this island. It now appears that since the publication of the List in question Sir W. H. Doyle retired, and was succeeded as Chief Justice by Sir George Anderson; hence the mistake as to the person appointed. It seems, moreover, that the new Chief Justice of Ceylon will hold the office for but a limited period, six months or a year, in order to qualify him for retirement from active service, an arrangement which we should have thought might have been carried out equally well in the Bahamas, without the trouble of a voyage to Ceylon, thus avoiding any disturbance of existing arrangements, at any rate, until the coming Chief Justice be forthcoming.—Ceylon Times, Jan. 20.

THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD AND PROFESSOR MAX MULLER.

In a Convocation held at Oxford on Tuesday, the proposal to relieve Professor Max Muller of the obligation to lecture, and to provide for the appointment of a deputy who should receive one-half of the salary of the present professor, was introduced by the Dean of Christchurch. The object of the decree was to prevent the professor from carrying out his intention of resigning. Vienna had offered the professor a Chair of Sanskrit and provision for the publication of his books; and to this offer an immediate answer was necessary. The present, it must be understood, was a provisional arrangement in view of impending changes. The Dean was authorised to state that the Government "Universities" Bill would constitute an Executive Commission, with powers to receive schemes from colleges, and to base upon them the new University and collegiate organisation. He pledged himself there should be an opportunity given for considering in consitutional form the permanent arrangement of the matter at present in hand. The Dean dwelt at some length on the professor's services, and concluded by enumerating a list of his distinctions, urging the University to keep him if it could, how it could, while it could.

Mr. Chase urged that the real question was not the deserts of the professor, but the form in which Convocation was called on to show its sense of them. Why continue his residence here under a false name? Why not give him a pension and leave him at liberty to reside where he chose?

The Master of the University (Mr. Bradley) was thankful that the University was moved to retain such an ornament. He illustrated Professor Max Muller's deserts by the fact that he had revivified the classical studies of all schoolboys. The number of such men was not so great that the University could afford to spare one world renowned genuine student.

Mr. Knox asked why a pension had not been offered to the professor, leaving intact the stipend attached to the Chair of Comparative Philology.

Professor Palmer replied that the University knew nothing of pensions to Professors, nor did the decree contemplate such a course. What was proposed was to retain Professor Max Muller and to profit by his future labours, not to reward his past services, securing, among other things, that the results of his future labours, so important to the Rulers of India, should be published in England and in the English tongue.

Mr. Loch, on behalf of the younger members of the University, observed that the Professor's presence alone, even with an inferior deputy, would be an encouragement to the study of Comparative Philology.

The Master of Balliol spoke in favour of the decree. There were many objections to all propositions, there were many to this, but as many to any other. Speed was necessary, and the financial condition of the University must be considered. Dr. Acland, after illustrating Professor Max Muller's deserts from his own experience, observed that dissension in this matter while the Heir to the Throne was journeying in India was most inopportune. He hoped there might be no division.

Mr. Atkinson, as a non-resident member, expressed his sympathy with the universal expressions of regard and respect for the professor, and his regret for the exhausted state of the University chest.

Upon a division, the decree was carried by 94 votes to 35.

JUNIOR NAVAL AND MILITARY CLUB.—The opening dinner of this Club took place at the new Club-house, in Pall-mall, on the 8th instant, the president of the club, Admiral Sir Henry Keppel, in the chair. The vice-president of the club, Lieut.-General Sir Alexander Horsford, was also present.

Steam Navigation Company, are noted in G. de Quetteville's Indian Circular of the 17th inst., viz.:—From Southampton to Aden, per Venetia, Feb. 17, gold, £675; to Bombay, per Mirzapore, Feb. 10, silver, £10,000; per Venetia, silver, £95,100; to Singapore, per Mirzapore, silver, £17,500; to Shanghai, silver, £9,220.

THE WILL OF THE LATE MAJOR-GENERAL REECE.—The hearing of this case in the Court of Probate was again resumed on Feb. 17, when the evidence for the plaintiffs was concluded. The cause was before the Right Hon. Sir James Hannen, on Friday, for the seventh time. On this remarkable case being again called on, Archdeacon Reece again went into the witness-box, and was further cross-examined by Sergeant Parry. Afterwards Lieut. Reece, the other defendant, went into the box. The case is proceeding.

INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.—The following is a list of Indian medical candidates who were successful at both the London and Netley examinations, having passed through a course of instruction at the Army Medical School, February, 1876:—1. P. A. Weir, 5,536 marks; 2. P. J. Freyer, 5,508; 3. P. de H. Haig, 4,826; 4. J. Lewtas, 4,729; 5. E. Ferrand, 4,708; 6. F. H. Pedroza, 4,681; 7. J. O'Neill, 4,675; 8. J. W. Clarkson, 4,472; 9. Joseph Parker, 4,188; 10. C. H. Day, 4,096. Mr. Weir gained the Herbert Prize.

EXCHANGES BETWEEN LIEUT.-COLONELS, R.A.—The following Rule is to govern the limits within which officers of the Royal Artillery may be permitted to exchange until further orders:—"No exchange between Lieutenant-Colonels will be sanctioned where such exchange will interfere with the interests of the other Lieutenant-Colonels of the Brigade on either side as regards succession to command. No application for exchange will be entertained from any officer within the number from the top of his respective list and grade as specified as follows:—Lieutenant-Colonels, 10; Majors, 15; Captains, 20; Lieutenants, 30. These figures are modified for the Royal (late Indian) Artillery."

DEATH OF VISCOUNT EXMOUTH.—We have to announce the death of this nobleman, which occurred on February 11, at Kensington. Edward Pellew, Viscount Exmouth, and Baron Exmouth, of Canonteign, county Devon, in the peerage of the United Kingdom, and a baronet, was the eldest son of Pownoll-Bastard, second viscount, by his first wife, Eliza Harriet, eldest daughter of Sir George Hilaro Barlow, Bart., G.C.B. (which marriage was dissolved by Act of Parliament in 1820), and was born near Plymouth, 14th Feb., 1811. The late lord was in the Bengal Civil Service from 1829 to 1839. He is succeeded in the title by his nephew, Edward Fleetwood John, eldest son of the late Hon. Fleetwood John Pellew. The first viscount was the celebrated Admiral Pellew, G.C.B., who bombarded Algiers in 1816.

A HEAVY CLAIM FOR SALVAGE SERVICES.—In the Admiralty Division, the salvage case of the Viceroy was heard on Feb. 14, assisted by Captains Close and Nisbet, of the Trinity House. The action was brought on behalf of the screw-steamer Lorne, belonging to Messrs. J. Warrack and Co., of Leith, against the screw steamer Viceroy, belonging to Messrs. Green and Co., of Blackwall, and against the owners of her cargo. The value of the Viceroy and her cargo was estimated at £150,600, the latter being composed of Manchester goods. A tender of £1,000 was paid into court. It appeared by the evidence that the two vessels were bound from London to India, and that the Viceroy had a large number of passengers on board, in addition to her valuable cargo. A heavy gale had been blowing from the north-west, during which the Lorne was hove to, while the Viceroy was labouring heavily, having lost her rudder and rudder-post from the water-line. The Lorne, by the request of the master of the Viceroy, took the latter vessel in tow to Alexandria, which place was reached in about five days. It was alleged great danger and delay was occasioned to the Lorne in towing the Viceroy, and so rescuing the vessel from a position of the greatest peril. The learned judge considered the services of very great value, and increased the award to £3,000.

MR. MARGARY'S JOURNEY.—At the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society on Monday night Mr. Clements Markham read portions of the diary of the late Mr. Margary during his journey from Hankow to Talifu. Before proceeding to the business of the evening the President, Sir Henry Rawlinson, said that information had been received from Loanda that the consul had purchased for £1,000 a schooner, in which Lieutenant Cameron's fifty-seven followers would leave for Zanzibar early in January. Lieutenant Cameron was to have left Loanda on the 10th or 12th of January, and, should he come direct to England, they might expect him in a week or ten days; but if he stopped at Madeira he would be in England before Easter. After the reading of the extracts from Mr. Margary's journal there was a discussion, in which Sir Rutherford Alcock, Dr. Anderson, Colonel Yule, and other gentlemen took part. Sir Rutherford Alcock said the record of Mr. Margary's journey threw a great light upon the relations existing between the central Government in China and the provinces. From all he had heard, he did not think the time had arrived when they could advantageously open up trade with the interior of China. Dr. Anderson, who was a member of the expedition to which Mr. Margary was attached, gave an interesting account of the circumstances preceding the murder of the latter gentleman.

COLLISION AT SEA.—LOSS OF LIFE.—A disastrous collision occurred on Thursday afternoon, off Dover, at about 4.30, between the steamer Strathclyde, of Glasgow, bound to Bombay, and an ocean-going steamer, the Franconia, about a mile off the Admiralty Pier. The former steamer had been into Dover Bay to land her pilot, and in steering out again to take a westerly course was caught by the strong tide, which turned her bow round to about S.E. The Franconia coming down Channel ran into her on the port quarter with great force, and in about two minutes the boilers of the Strathclyde exploded, and the vessel sank. At the time of the collision the weather was clear and the sea calm. The Dover lifeboat went out but did not pick up anyone. Later intelligence which reached Dover on Friday morning states that the captain and twenty-eight of the passengers and crew of the Strathclyde have been landed at Deal. The passengers saved and landed at Deal are Captain Beckett, Mrs. Beckett, Mr. Weatherdon, Mr. William Russell, and one other passenger, who died shortly after being brought ashore. Two lady passengers and three gentlemen, names unknown, are reported to have been picked up by Messrs. George Thomson's barque Queen of Nations, and taken to London. The German steamer Franconia is reported to have proceeded for the river. The Strathclyde's masts stand about twenty feet above water in the Fairway, about two miles from shore. Exact details are still wanting of the loss of life caused by the disastrous collision in the Straits of Dover. It is to be feared, however, that it exceeds forty, and the actual list of those who survive leaves forty-seven as either having died since landing or being still unaccounted for.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, Feb. 14.—THE INDIAN CIVIL AND MILITARY SERVICES.—Sir P. O'BRIEN asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether the attention of the Indian Government had been directed to the loss sustained by members of the Indian Civil and Military Services (when transmitting money home to their families), in consequence of the depreciation of the exchangeable value of the rupee; and whether it was contemplated to propose a gold currency for India, or to take other steps to remedy the grievance complained of.—Lord G. HAMILTON said the attention of the Government had been directed to the subject, but it was not contemplated to alter the currency, and the hon. baronet would see the great difficulty of making any further allowance to the officers in question, considering that the depreciation of silver largely increased the expenses of the Indian Government.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ON INDIA.—In reply to a question put by Mr. B. DENISON, Lord G. HAMILTON said: The Secretary of State does not at present intend to alter the system of drawing Bills of exchange upon India, but he is quite prepared to adopt from time to time such measures as may appear to him likely to lessen the loss on exchange, and he will be glad to consider any practical suggestion which my hon. friend or any other authority may have to make to him. The loss of two millions per annum is chiefly a matter of account, as the rupee is estimated for convenience' sake in the Indian accounts at 2s. Previous to 1857 the rupee was estimated at 1s. 10½d.—Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, in answer to Mr. M'ARTHUR, said: The India-office advertisement of the 10th of November, 1863, the terms of which are by the advertisements now issued applicable for tenders for Bills on India, provides that "the Secretary of State will not be bound to accept any tender." On the 2nd inst. tenders were accepted to the amount of Rs. 17,50,000, at 1s. 9½d. and 1s. 9⅝d. the rupee, all other tenders at lower rates being, in the exercise of the power referred to, rejected. Application was subsequently made that the accepted tenders might be cancelled on the ground that by a clerical error the rates had been wrongly stated, and the Secretary of State, being satisfied of the accuracy of that representation, consented to cancel the tenders.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—The House having gone into a committee of supply the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved the vote of £4,080,000 for the purchase of the Suez Canal shares. After reading the Treasury minute which explains how this sum is made up, he related at length the history of the Canal, eulogising warmly the sagacity, energy, and enterprise of M. de Lesseps and the successive Khedives to which its construction was mainly due, and entered into a detailed exposition of the financial position of the company. After a discussion on the subject the debate was adjourned until Feb. 21.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, Feb. 15.—FACTORY LEGISLATION IN INDIA.—In reply to a question put by Mr. ANDERSON on the subject of Factory Legislation in India, Lord GEORGE HAMILTON said: The matter at present stands thus:—In March last year a Commission was appointed in Bombay to inquire into the subject. The commission made its report in July, 1875, the majority being adverse to any legislation upon the subject. The President and Dr. Blaney, another member of the Commission, were of opinion that a simple legislative Act would be beneficial. The Government upon receiving this report determined to make further inquiries, and the Collectors of Surat and Broach are now collecting evidence. A final report may therefore shortly be expected.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, Feb. 17.—THE INDIAN ARMY.—Mr. G. HARDY informed Sir G. CAMPBELL that careful inquiry had been made with regard to the possibility of combining the military requirements of India with short service in the army at home, but no decision had been come to.—Sir G. CAMPBELL would on the 25th inst. call attention to the injury resulting from further postponement of a decision on this question.

HER MAJESTY'S TITLE.—Mr. DISRAELI moved that the orders of the day be postponed until after the notice of motion for a Bill relating to the Royal titles.—The portion of the Queen's Speech relating to the reception of the Prince of Wales in India, and the portion alluding to the change in the Royal titles, having been read, Mr. Disraeli proceeded to sketch the changes that had taken place in India during the last forty years. The visit of the Prince, he remarked, had increased the sympathy between the two countries. He praised the action taken by his Royal Highness, and then proceeded to say he had to ask for leave to introduce a Bill of a single clause to enable her Majesty to make certain changes in her style and titles. He proposed to take the same course as that adopted in the reign of George III. When under proclamation her Majesty would set forth her new title, he was sure it would give satisfaction to the native princes of India and also to the people of Great Britain. It had been said that India had been a burden, but this step would show people that it was looked upon as one of our most precious possessions.—Mr. LOWE said that the Government had no doubt well considered the matter, but he felt bound to make certain objections. First, it would be well to know what was the meaning of the word "Imperial," which was evidently the title intended, and what was implied by the word "Empress." He then referred to the idea of the Crown of the United Kingdom being an Imperial one. He could see no advantage likely to accrue from her Majesty being called Queen of England and Empress of India two styles which, in her case, mean precisely the same thing, and would only lead to confusion. He then quoted from the proclamation of George III. the Latin list of titles, and their accepted English translation. In his view, it would be better that her Majesty should retain the title of Queen of India; but, at the same time, he pointed out the peculiarity of her titles reading "Queen Defender of the Faith."—Sir GEORGE CAMPBELL supported the motion, and, amidst much laughter, said that he should be glad to see her Majesty occupy the same position in her rule of India as that formerly occupied by the Great Mogul.—Sir GEORGE BOWYER, Mr. FORSTER, and several other members briefly addressed the House.—Mr. DISRAELI, in alluding to the remarks of Mr. Lowe, observed that the right hon. gentleman was always a prophet of evil. Whether it was a war in India or Abyssinia, he was always ready to speak of the dark future of England. Touching upon the condition of conquest, Mr. Disraeli agreed that it would not have been advisable to make such a change directly after the Indian Mutiny, though the present time was suitable. He had no fear of misconception on the part of the Indian Princes, for as a whole, they would be peculiarly gratified, for they were proud of being the feudatories of a great Power, and would receive with acclamation any arrangement for drawing them together. He pressed on the House for permission to bring in the Bill, for it was a question of high policy.—Mr. BRIGHT said that this was a matter of so much importance, concerning, as it did, those who came after as well as ourselves, that he felt that the House was entitled to know what was intended to be done before they gave consent to the passing of the Bill. In reply, Mr. DISRAELI stated that he did not say whether he would or would not give the required information, but it was quite opposed to precedent. If he did give it, the Bill would not be one to enable her Majesty to make certain changes in her titles, but one compelling her to adopt such titles as were chosen for her by Parliament; therefore he hoped that permission would be given.—After a few words by Mr. PERCY WYNDHAM, and Mr. J. GOLDSMID, leave was given to bring in the Bill.

INDIAN LEGISLATION.—On the order for the second reading of the Indian Legislation Bill, Mr. DENISON intimated his intention to move amendments in committee.—After a few words from Mr. LEITH, Sir G. CAMPBELL, and Sir G. BALFOUR, Mr. FAWCETT said that the bringing on of such an important measure at that hour without a word of explanation from the Government was a strange commentary on the Bill introduced in regard to India earlier in the evening. (Hear, hear.) It did not augur well for the increased interest which it had been said England would in future take in Indian affairs. (Hear, hear.) He rebuked Sir G. Campbell for comparing England's government of India to that of the Great Mogul. (Hear, hear.)—Lord G. HAMILTON denied that there had been any attempt during the past two years on the part of the Secretary for India to weaken the powers of the Governor-General, and in this case the Governor-General himself wished the Bill to be passed.—The Bill was read a second time.

NOTICE OF MOTION.—Mr. FAWCETT: On the second reading of the India Colonial Professional Appointment Bill to move that the Bill ought not to pass, because it throws an additional and unnecessary charge on the revenues of India.

MISS CARPENTER has left Calcutta for the North-Western Provinces and the Punjab.

DURING the second quarter of the current year there were 170 books, 138 pamphlets, 39 periodicals, and four miscellaneous works printed and published in the Punjab.

BRIND'S BATTERY.—The battery—known as Battery No. 1—was at a distance of seven hundred yards from the enemy's works. It was divided into two parts connected by a trench. The right portion was constructed to cover five heavy guns and a howitzer, the special function of which was to demolish the Moree Bastion—our most obtrusive assailant all through the siege. The left contained four guns, intended to keep down the fire of the Cashmere Bastion. This battery was under the command of Major James Brind, who had virtually, indeed, commanded the heavy artillery throughout the greater portion of the operations before Delhi, who had always been foremost where work was to be done, and who, whilst careful in the extreme of his men, had exposed himself in a manner which had called forth the remonstrances of his friends. If there was any fault to be found with him, it was the glorious fault of doing too much. His restless bravery never halted. He did not know what it was to "stand at ease." But this very activity, though sometimes wasted, suggested, when there was real work to be done, that Brind was the man to do it. He had now the honour, coveted by every artilleryman in the field, of commencing the attack upon those works which had so long defied us. But on that morning, in that unfinished battery, it was a service of extreme danger. The morning light had fully revealed our designs to the insurgents, and laid bare our position. So they poured down from the Moree a pitiless shower of shot and shell, and sent out light guns with riflemen to endeavour to take the battery in flank, whilst Brind's gunners, animated by his noble example, were working, unshaken and undismayed, to get their pieces into position. Only one gun was mounted when the fire commenced. Then "Brind dragged a howitzer well to the rear and fired over the parapet." It was but a feeble response he could return to the bellowing enemy; but he was resolute to give them something, and he knew that he would soon give them something more. Thus, ever as the sun rose higher and higher, the enemy fired and our people fell. But as gun after gun was mounted on its platform, the inequality of the conflict ceased; and then began that of which the insurgents behind their wall had had no former experience—perhaps, indeed, no conception. They had laughed at our long shots. But the close quarters to which we now brought our heavy guns, and the admirable manner in which they were served, gave altogether a new aspect to the operations before Delhi. The insurgents stood manfully to their guns. But the masonry of the Moree soon began to crumble; and ere the heat of the day had passed, the fire of the enemy had slackened, and before sunset it had feebly dwindled away into total quietude. But they had fired to some purpose. Our men were scarce, though our material was abundant, and the result of that first day's work was that there were some seventy casualties in our trenches. Nor was it the fire from the Moree alone that distressed our people in the battery. They were, also, much molested by some light field pieces and skirmishers of the enemy posted on our right. These enfiladed the battery and sometimes even took it in reverse. To meet these attacks and to protect our position Brind brought down two field guns from the rear. Moreover, the mutineers, inspired probably by our sappers, who to the number of eight hundred had joined the insurgent force, ran a trench along the plain in front of both sections of the battery, about midway between the city walls and our position, from which they kept up a constant fire and did some damage to us, as the battery had been hastily erected without mantlets and with over large embrasures.—Kaye's Sepoy War, Vol. III.

COCKLE'S ANTIBILIOUS PILLS, and we find that the desired end may be obtained without scales and weights, and little mysterious compartments, and enchanted bottles with crystal stoppers. Others might be used, but as tasted by many thousands of persons, are found to answer their purpose so well, may be set down as the best.—Observer.

LAMPLOUGH'S

PYRETIC SALINE.

Important to all, more especially English Ministers, British Consuls, and Europeans seeking to reside in safety in Tropical and Foreign Climates.

Her Majesty's Representative, the Governor of Sierra Leone, in a letter of request for an additional supply of PYRETIC SALINE, states:—"It is of great value, and I shall rejoice to hear it is in the hands of all Europeans visiting the tropics."

SICKNESS, HEADACHE, and NAUSEA are in most cases immediately relieved by taking a teaspoonful in a tumbler of cold water. This can be repeated once or twice in two hours, if needful.

SEA VOYAGES.—It is a very valuable accompaniment, and should on no account be omitted. It instantly allays the sea or bilious sickness.

For BILIOUS CONSTITUTIONS, giving rise to vitiated secretions, Indigestion, and Eruptions on the Skin, a teaspoonful should be taken daily with the dinner in a tumbler of water, and the same quantity on going to bed. May be obtained of the Proprietor,

H. LAMPLOUGH, Consulting Chemist, 113, HOLBORN, E.C.,

Second door from Hatton-garden, London, and of all respectable Chemists. In Bottles, 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 21s.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, February 7; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, February 5; Calcutta, February 4.

THE local papers describe the Prince of Wales's progress from Agra to Gwalior, his magnificent reception at the latter place by Sindia, and his subsequent arrival at Jaipur. We note, but even this may not be new, that the Maharajah of Gwalior drank the health of the Queen and her eldest son in champagne, "with English honours." The Prince for his part was "evidently delighted with Sindia's frank and manly speech," and declared himself proud to enrol his Highness among his personal friends.

ON leaving Lahor for Agra, the Prince of Wales was escorted as far as Amritsar by Sir Charles Reid and a full battery of horse-artillery; his Royal Highness being anxious to witness the "end loading" system introduced by Sir Charles Reid. The battery paraded in marching order at 10.30 A.M. with guns and limbers, in all 102 horses and four officers' chargers. His Royal Highness arrived at the Lahor station at 10.45, and a few minutes later the process of loading began. The whole of the guns and limbers were on board in ten minutes, and the whole of the horses in 18½ minutes. In five minutes under the half hour the train was coupled and ready to start. On reaching Amritsar, thirty-three miles distant, the unloading took place in front of his Royal Highness. In 4½ minutes the first gun was ready for action, the second in five and the third in six minutes. All six guns were ready in ten minutes; all the horses were out of the train in 13½ minutes. Further experiments with the end loading system have since been carried out at Delhi, under a committee headed by Sir Charles Reid. A few days later at Delhi, on the 28th January, three 40-pounders with four mortars, the usual train of carts, and a full complement of men and bullocks, were all loaded in one hour. After the train reached Ghaziabad, the first gun was got out and fired in eight minutes, the second in thirteen, and the third in twenty-four minutes, while all the 134 bullocks were brought out in twenty-three minutes. Ten minutes then sufficed to put them on board again, and all three guns were shipped and ready for starting in thirteen minutes. One object of this experiment was to see if the trucks on the Sind, Punjab, and Delhi Railway were strong enough for heavy guns. The result appears to have been most satisfactory as a practical test. The girders for guns and the ramps for the bullocks were pronounced perfect, a slight alteration only in the former being considered necessary by Sir Charles Reid.

AMONG the deaths recorded in the Indian papers is that of Colonel George Browne Roberts, 2nd squadron officer of the 3rd Madras Cavalry, who died from heart disease on parade at Sagar, while the regiment was being inspected by the Brigadier. Colonel Roberts entered the army as Cornet in December, 1845, became Captain in November, 1856, and Lieutenant-colonel in 1871. On the 3rd February Captain Butler, deputy master attendant at Calcutta, was drowned on his way home from a shooting excursion in company with some of the Serapis officers. Their steam-launch was run down by a tug, and after the first excitement Captain Butler was missing. One officer of the Serapis had a narrow escape.

WE hear that the Peshawar command, vacant next April, was offered to Sir Charles Brownlow, who, in consequence of failing health, was obliged to refuse it. General Brownlow has been suffering much of late from the effects of a sunstroke, and intends to proceed home on an early date.

CAPTAIN CHANNER, who took the stockade at the Bukit Putus Pass in Sungi Ujong, has been recommended for the Victoria Cross by Colonel Clay.

BY the latest accounts from Assam a further detachment of fifty-five men of the 44th Foot left Dibrugarh on February 2 in a steamer for Golaghat as a reserve force for the protection of the Naga Survey party.

LORD NAPIER was to start from Delhi for Calcutta on Feb. 7, accompanied by his Adjutant and Quarter-Master General. It appears that his Lordship's doctors were not prepared to sanction so long a journey sooner, wishing to give the broken collar-bone time to knit so far as to remove all cause for further anxiety.—Sir Neville Chamberlain, the new Commander-in-Chief at Madras, landed there on the morning of February 1 under the usual salute. The Honourable Mr. Justice Holloway arrived by the same steamer.—The Duke of Buckingham was to leave Madras by steamer, on the 16th February, to pay a visit to the Viceroy at Calcutta. He will return direct to Madras, the trip to Haidarabad and Bellary having been given up for the present.—The Governor of Bombay, Sir P. Wodehous, had met with a warm reception at Sattara, the old capital of Sivaji, where the leading citizens obtained from his Excellency a promise to "consider any proposals" that might be made to him for the founding of an industrial school in aid of the poor people of that district.

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE'S last minute on Education informs us that most of the Bengal districts are now supplied with all the schools they want. Every year witnesses numerous accessions to the ranks of specially trained teachers, of whom, last year, 1,542 were certificated; and the question now remains how to work this educational machinery with the greatest possible benefit to the people. It seems clear that Sir Richard Temple has imparted much of his own enthusiasm to district officers and local committees. Specially remarkable is the personal interest which the municipalities and the native members of committees are taking in their primary schools. In many districts, too, the people have made themselves responsible for much of the outlay which formerly had to be met by the Government. We wish the same could be said for those who benefit by the higher education. Each student at the Barhampur College, for example, costs Government Rs. 1,192 a year. After all this liberal bribing of the College Babus, it is discouraging to find that very few of them pass with credit at the Calcutta University examinations. Not the least interesting portions of Sir Richard Temple's minute are those which refer to the growth of female education, and the dying away of the fierce prejudices with which the Mohammedan population formerly regarded the Government schools.

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE'S recent tour through Darjiling and Sikhim, his examination of the Thibetan passes, and his subsequent minutes on what he saw, show that he means to eclipse all his predecessors in the matter of establishing closer relations with outlying countries. "Having considered," he says, "the alternative routes to Thibet, and having found the route from Darjiling to the Jailap Pass into the Thibetan district of Chombi to be quite the best for the through-traffic between Bengal and Thibet, I am taking steps to make that route easier for laden animals than it is at present." This may seem only a small beginning; but it is a beginning in the right direction, and all, perhaps, which, under the circumstances, we could expect. It is well-known that the Thibetans would visit India in much greater numbers than at present, and that the trade between the two countries would be very largely increased, were it not for the scarcity of roads and the wretched nature of those already in existence. Once let the people have really good roads, and enlarged transactions with the Thibetans, and the opening up of that hitherto unknown land will follow as a thing of course.

A LONG-FORGOTTEN hero of the Mutiny days has at length turned up again in the person of Shaikh Paltu, a sepoy of the old 34th N.I., who seized his mutinous comrade, Mangal Pandi, and so saved the life of his Adjutant, Lieutenant Baugh. Mangal Pandi fired at the European Sergeant-Major of the 34th N.I., then at Barrackpore, and then attacked Lieutenant (now Colonel) Baugh, who had ridden up on hearing the disturbance. "Mungul Pandi," writes Kaye, "was a desperate man, and the strokes of his tulwar fell heavily upon his assailants; and he might perhaps have despatched them both, if a Mohammedan sepoy, of the Grenadier Company, named Sheikh Pultoo, had not seized the mutineer and averted his blows. All this passed at the distance of a few yards only from the Quarter Guard of the 34th, where a jemadar and twenty men were on duty. The sound of the firing had brought many others from the lines, and sepoys in uniform and out of uniform crowded around in a state of tumultuous excitement. But, with the exception of this Sheikh Pultoo, no man moved to assist his officer, no man moved to arrest the criminal. Nor was their guilt only the guilt of inaction. Some of the sepoys of the guard struck the wounded officers on the ground with the butt ends of their muskets, and one fired his piece at them; and when Sheikh Pultoo called upon them to arrest the mutineer, they abused him, and said that if he did not release Mungul Pandi they would shoot him. But he held the desperate fanatic until Baugh and the Sergeant-Major had escaped, and doubtless to his fidelity they owed their lives." Strange to say Shaikh Paltu, who was supposed to be long ago dead, has lately been discovered by the settlement officer of the Banda district, where he has lived quietly cultivating a small patch of land since the Mutiny. In some petty revenue suit he put forward his good service as a plea for consideration, and this led to his discovery. The authorities were at first inclined to doubt his story, but he has since been recognised by at least one surviving officer of the regiment in a way that sets all doubt at rest. The truth seems to be, that Paltu had no one to push his claim for him, and did not know how to do it himself. It is due to a fortunate accident that the Government now has it in its power to reward a man whose loyalty was put to so severe a test. The pity is that the old man can have but few years left to enjoy what he earned so well.

ON the 19th February the Prince of Wales arrived at Bansassa, and was met a few miles from the place by Sir Jung Bahadur and suite and the British Resident in Nepal, all having crossed the River Sarda into British territory the previous day. The Prince on reaching his camp received the visit of Sir Jung Bahadur, who came in State, wearing magnificent jewels and attended by a brilliant suite. His Royal Highness afterwards returned the visit, and was received with due ceremony. A picked force of Nepalese infantry, cavalry, and artillery was drawn up and paid his Royal Highness the usual military honours. Presents were exchanged, Sir Jung Bahadur presenting the Prince, among other things, with a fine collection of living wild beasts and birds. The Prince, on leaving Sir Jung Bahadur's tent, inspected the Nepalese force, and complimented Sir Jung on their appearance. Sir Jung returned into Nepal in the evening, and the Prince shortly afterwards also crossed into Nepalese territory. The sport in the Kumaon Terai during the week had been fair, and included two tigers, two cubs, three bears, two bear cubs, and one leopard, besides numerous other game. The Prince of Wales was in perfect health.

ON the 20th the Prince of Wales again received a visit from Sir Jung Bahadur at Mandiaghat in Nepal. Sir Jung welcomed the Prince, and expressed the pleasure it gave his master and himself to see him in Nepal. Everything would be done to render his Royal Highness's visit an agreeable one, and to gratify his every wish. The speaker said, in conclusion, that he had never forgotten the visit which he paid to England in 1850, and the reception extended to him by her Majesty Queen Victoria and the late Prince Consort. It was his intention to have gone to England last year had not an accident prevented him, but he hoped to be able to repeat his visit on a future occasion. The Prince of Wales, in reply, thanked Sir Jung Bahadur for his expressions of goodwill, and for the services of the Nepalese Government to the British cause during the Indian Mutiny. His Royal Highness had always strongly wished to visit Nepal, and was glad to have had an opportunity of doing so. Sir Jung Bahadur assured the Prince that nothing in his career gave him greater satisfaction than to be able to assist the British Government during the Mutiny, and should the necessity arise at any future time he would feel it his duty to render England the utmost assistance in his power.

ON the night of February 21 Sir Jung Bahadur, attended by some of his Chiefs, visited the Prince's table towards the close of dinner, and, in an excellent speech, proposed the health of the Queen, who might always rely on Nepal as faithful or obedient (the word used was variously interpreted as tributary, subservient, or obedient). After the toast was drunk, Sir Jung proposed the health of the Prince of Wales, and said that the honour he had done them in coming to Nepal was felt to be the greatest pleasure. The Prince had trusted himself unreservedly to the care and protection of Nepal. There had been splendid sport that day; seven tigers were shot, six falling to the Prince's rifle. His Royal Highness was accompanied by Sir Jung Bahadur. Upwards of 600 elephants were employed in beating the jungle, and the sight was of an imposing character.

THE Prince of Wales and party had a most exciting day's sport in Nepal on Friday last. They went in pursuit of a wild elephant, which, at the end of a long chase, was captured. Four more tigers and one panther have been shot, the majority falling to the Prince's rifle. His Royal Highness and all the party are perfectly well.

ACCORDING to a Rangoon telegram of yesterday's date there has been an outbreak in Maulmain Jail, in which eleven prisoners were shot and several wounded. The Karenni Boundary Commission is reported to have stopped at Bhamo, as the escort is awaiting news from Messrs. Baber and Grosvenor before starting.

THE Maharajah of Bardwan has sent the following letter to the Times:—

Sir,—Having read with the greatest admiration the account of the heroic conduct displayed by some of the boys of the training ship Goliath on the occasion of the recent destruction by fire of that ill-fated vessel, I have felt a very strong wish to present a silver medal to each of those who signally distinguished themselves on that occasion.

I may have been forestalled in this wish, but I trust that I may be allowed to do something of the kind, as, coming from India, it will prove to the boys that deeds like theirs have not merely a local fame, but are marked and appreciated by their fellow subjects in the most distant parts of her Majesty's Empire.

I have taken the liberty of addressing you upon the subject, as I have been unable to ascertain the name of the society to which the ship belonged. I should have written direct to its offices had I been able to discover it, and I have, therefore, to beg that, while pardoning me for the rouble I am giving you, you will do me the further favour of forwarding to the proper authorities the enclosed draught to cover the cost of the medals, and of intimating that, if necessary, I shall be happy to remit a further sum.

A Bengali Babu of high standing lately introduced the Prince of Wales and some other English gentlemen to the ladies of his Zanána, and now we have the no less novel spectacle of a Hindu Rajah proclaiming his admiration for the courageous efforts of some English boys to save their fellow-creatures from imminent death. Such instances of departure from old use and wont seem to betoken the increasing influence of Western ethics on the minds of our Indian fellow-subjects. To those who are acquainted with the habitual indifference of the Eastern world to the principle of saving human lives from imminent danger, the good example set by the Rajah of Bardwan—if he has acted on his own prompting—holds out an encouraging prospect of further advance in the same direction. This is not the first time, if we remember rightly, that the Rajah of Bardwan has given proof of a more active sympathy with his fellow-men than most of his countrymen have yet learned to show. Some years ago his Highness fed and succoured for several days many thousands of starving natives who had been driven from their homes and work by heavy floods. During the recent famine he also contributed largely to the relief of sufferers in Bengal.

ACCORDING to a telegram from Tashkand the Russian troops under General Scobeleff entered the capital of Khokan on the evening of the 20th current. It appears that they were well received by the inhabitants, who expressed great satisfaction at the incorporation of the Khanate with Russia.

A TELEGRAM from General Kolpakowsky, dated Tashkand, February 22, announces that General Scobeleff, on entering Khokan was received with loyal demonstrations. Bonfires were also lit in his honour. When he had arrived within sixteen versts of the city the authorities sent a deputation to meet him, who surrendered to the General twenty-nine pieces of cannon. Nasr-Uddin, however, being surrounded by enemies of Russia, assumed an equivocal attitude, and it was even stated that he had given a written obligation to the priests to undertake a holy war against Russia. In pursuance of orders from General Scobeleff, Nasr-Uddin and Abdurahman were both removed from Khokan, and several disturbers of public order were arrested. The people, however, are glad to see the civil war at an end, and are anxiously awaiting the decision of the Emperor of Russia. On the 23rd of February General Kolpakowsky was to start from Tashkand for Khokan to regulate affairs and establish order.

A SHANGHAI correspondent of the Times states that the Special Commissioner, Li Han-chang, arrived at the provincial city of Yunan on the 13th of November, and allowed little time to elapse before providing himself and his Imperial master with a theory of the causes which led to Mr. Margary's murder, and to the attack on Colonel Browne's expedition. The gist of his report is thus reproduced in the Imperial edict to which it gave birth:—

On his journey from Yunan to Burmah, Margary, being provided with a passport, was duly escorted from point to point through the different districts, which he traversed in perfect safety. On his return, at a later date, from Burmah to Yunan, no notice was given to the local authorities to send an escort to meet him, the consequence of which was that certain lawless offenders lying in wait for opportunities took advantage of the occasion to commit robbery and murder.

The alleged absence of due notice is utterly at variance with the fact that Margary wrote twice from Bhamo, announcing the departure of the mission before it set out for Manwain. Moreover, his previous journey through Yunan with his passport and letters from the Tsung-li-yamên declaring his object, was the fullest possible notice to all the authorities with whom he came in contact that the Indian mission was about to enter the province. The Chinese Commissioner further accuses the Yunan officials and local authorities of want of foresight and energy before the event, the total neglect of measures for the arrest and punishment of the guilty parties afterwards, and their supersession and trial are recommended. It also appears from a private letter of November 25 that fourteen prisoners had been brought from the district where Mr. Margary lost his life to the prisons of the provincial capital. Two died on the way, and the other twelve, who do not speak Chinese, may or may not have had anything to do with the murder. Old experience of Chinese trickiness in such matters will doubtless put the British Commissioners on their guard against any attempt to substitute the innocent for the guilty on the present occasion.

IN the course of the debate of Friday last, on Mr. Holms's motion, Sir G. Campbell redeemed his promise to point out the injurious effects of applying the short-service system to the British Army in India. His main argument was that "not only would the Indian Army under short service cost more than it now did, but that it would be infinitely less efficient than it now was." While in India he saw a good deal of service with troops, and he "had been immensely impressed with the difference between seasoned regiments and new regiments. The former were far better and more efficient soldiers, and were also experienced in the ways of the country, knowing how to make themselves comfortable." Sir George feared that under the six years' system "there could not be an efficient army in India. The regiments there would consist of comparatively young men; and this would be a great evil." Under the twelve years' system a soldier on the average would spend at least six years in India, whereas under the new system he would not spend more than three years there. It is well that these objections should be fairly faced before India is burdened with the frightful expenses involved in carrying out the new system. Short service, moreover, implies a preponderance of young soldiers in the Indian army, young not only in years but in knowledge of the country—another serious objection to combining Indian with home service. One great excellence of the old Company's British army lay in the fact of the same regiments being always in India, fed from time to time with new blood, but always retaining the full strength of that local experience and traditional spirit which made them in every way more efficient, readier to go anywhere and do anything, than their "royal" contemporaries or their successors in the present day. And not only were they more efficient, but the same causes tended to make them better friends with the natives, more tolerant of native ways, less quick to insult or beat their dark-skinned neighbours. The example of the older men checked and moulded the behaviour of their young comrades, with results most salutary to all concerned. Under the present system much of this good understanding between the two races seems to have disappeared, while the cases of collision between English soldiers and the people in the bazaars have grown far more frequent. Of insubordinate conduct also we hear in these days a good deal more than we used in those of Gough and Gomm. The remedies suggested by Sir George Campbell and one or two other speakers really make for the only wise solution of the present difficulty. Enlistments for twelve years and freedom of choice between Indian and home service can hardly work in combination with a short service system, nor would these alone secure the full advantages of the system so rashly set aside after the Mutiny. All such proposals only bring out into clearer prominence the need of maintaining in India a separate British army, enlisted, let us say, for twelve years, with a limited freedom of exchange into the home army or the reserves.

WE regret to hear that the subscriptions to the Phillips Testimonial Fund come in but slowly, and in scanty volume, compared with the sums already awarded to the claimants of bonus compensation. It has even been stated that of the £25,000 drawn on the latter score by one firm of agents, only £150 has been placed to the credit of Colonel Strange's Committee. This sum, which would not nearly cover the mere outlay incurred by Colonel Phillips in fighting the claims of Indian officers, represents much less than half the very moderate percentage which the officers benefited were asked to pay. It would be a shabby return for their champion's zealous and unwearied services, if those who profit by them begrudge him and his helpmates the modest recompense of one and a-half per cent. on their actual winnings. To him above all are they indebted even for the poor concessions won last year. If numbers of them feel cruelly disappointed at the actual result, they should still remember that but for Colonel Phillips they would have got nothing at all beyond the terms awarded in 1866. They have reason to be sore still, but not with him who fought to the last for full compensation, and succeeded in getting for them all he could. His claims to their gratitude are all the stronger, if it be true that his own share of compensation under the despatch of last year may yet be forfeited, on the plea that he retired as a substantive lieutenant-colonel, although his promotion was cancelled, or at least never ratified, before his retirement. We earnestly hope that the plea, if it has been seriously advanced in any quarter, will not, for very shame, be pushed home against the very officer whose claims deserve the most liberal construction.

MESSRS. BLACKWOOD have just brought out a small but suggestive volume by Major-General Walker, C.B., on the "Organisation and Tactics of the Cavalry Division." Its author combines a firm belief in the importance of his favourite arm with long and intelligent study of tactical details in connection with the improvements suggested by late experience. His own experiments in India and his latest observations of German tactics have taught him that working by divisions is the true principle of cavalry, that a cavalry regiment should be organised by squadrons, "not only in the field but in the barrack-yard," that four squadrons, each of four divisions, should form a regiment, that a Division should consist of three brigades, two light and one heavy, with two or three batteries in all, and that all its manœuvres should be carried out in three lines. On these and other minor points he enlarges concisely with sufficient clearness, and with a marked leaning towards simple formations. His advocacy of the squadron, as at once the proper tactical and administrative unit, points to a reform which England stands nearly alone in putting off.

THE lamentable sinking of the Strathclyde off Dover at the very outset of her voyage to Bombay has plunged not a few Anglo-Indian families into mourning. Among the ladies who perished was the daughter of the late General Horsford, whose heavy guns did such execution at Gujarat. Among other victims were Major Loughnan, of the Bengal Staff Corps, and his wife. Major Loughnan was an ensign of 1855. He served with the old 13th N.I. in the Santhal campaign of 1855-56, and with the loyal remnant of that regiment he bore his part in 1857 in the battle of Chinhat and the memorable defence of the Lucknow Residency. Captain J. C. Greene, of the Bengal Artillery, which he entered in 1858, also perished with his wife; and the same fate befel Mr. and Mrs. W. Bussell, of the Indian Civil Service, and Mr. J. Graves, deputy magistrate in Sind.

IT has been decided that Colonel Pomeroy Colley, C.B., 2nd Queen's, Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at Aldershot, is to proceed next to India as Military Secretary on the Staff of Lord Lytton. ON Saturday last Lord Lytton received a deputation from the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, with regard to the cotton duties and the Marquis of Salisbury's recent declarations thereon. Lord Lytton, in reply, deemed it right of the authorities at home to ask the Indian Government to provide for the gradual extinction of those duties, when at the same time they recognised the difficulties which stood in their way. These presented themselves at every step that involved the possibility of even a temporary derangement between income and expenditure in India.

LAWYERS AT THE INDIA OFFICE.

[COMMUNICATED.]

IT appears from Lord G. Hamilton's resolution in Committee of the House of Commons that more lawyers are wanted at the India-office. They are, of course, required to help the Secretary of State to consider enactments by our Legislative Councils in India. It is modestly proposed that the "certain lawyers" of Lord G. Hamilton's resolution are not to exceed three in number. From Lord G. Hamilton's statement we may presume that at present no adequate remuneration is provided for counsel. But since counsel is elsewhere usually very handsomely remunerated, the fact of its not being so at the India-office is unique and worthy of notice, as showing the considerate regard of the Secretary of State for the Indian taxpayer. Still it would be interesting to know what the remuneration of counsel employed at the India-office has been in fees and salaries since Lord Salisbury's tenure of office. It is now proposed in behalf of these hardly-used legal gentlemen to extend to them the privileges of the original Council of India's Pensions Act of 1858. In other words, to provide for "certain lawyers" from the Inns of Court the same comfortable retiring allowances as was provided by the Act for Veteran Councillors, who had borne the heat and burden of work done in India previous to their appointment to Council. Needless to add that the lawyers for whom Lord Salisbury is making this provision are ignorant of the genius of the people of India and of the country out of whose revenues they are to be paid. It was recently announced that the meeting of the Barristers' Benevolent Fund Association was to be held in the Middle Temple Hall. In future the fittest place for this meeting will be the India-office, Westminster.

THE INDIAN COTTON DUTIES.

OUR prediction that Manchester would not be satisfied with the new Indian import duty on long-stapled cotton has just been verified by what happened at the interview on Thursday last between Lord Salisbury and a powerful deputation from the united cotton interest of Lancashire. The presence of some forty members of Parliament gave significant weight to the pressure thus brought to bear on the Secretary for India. The gist of the speeches made on this occasion was a demand for the entire abolition of import duties on cotton goods, in the interests nominally of free trade, but really of Lancashire and Lancashire alone. The speakers drew a woful picture of the ills involved in the continuance of duties which, according to one of them, were gradually killing the cotton industry of Lancashire, while another declared that the best of our Manchester workmen were being drawn away to the cotton-mills of Western India. And all this outcry is evoked by a duty of 5 per cent., yielding a revenue of about £800,000; a sum which India can ill-spare, and which at the utmost represents a very trifling tax on English industry. It is well-known by those who care to know the facts of the question, that the duty is raised for revenue purposes only. To call it a protective duty is to ignore the evidence of statistics open to all the world. Between 1856 and 1868 the piece-goods imported into India rose in value from less than 5 to over 16 millions, and in the four years from 1859, when the duty was doubled, the imports still kept rising, though not of course at the same pace. From 1862 to 1868, under the old 5 per cent. duty they rose in value from 8½ to 16 millions. If they have since declined a little from that figure, it is not because the duty has checked the English trade, but simply because India has once more begun to manufacture cotton cloths for herself. This may be a bore for Manchester, but it is too much to expect that India's interests should be deliberately sacrificed to Manchester's particular needs.

In his reply to the deputation the Marquis of Salisbury went quite as far as a Minister for India ought to go, when he said that the Lancashire manufacturers had a right to complain of the duty on cotton, whether its effects were great or small. His expressions of sympathy indeed with his interviewers provoked from the Times an avowal of regret, that he "made no attempt to lead them to understand that his primary duty in administering his office was to consider the circumstances of India, and not of Lancashire." His Lordship might, we think, without any discourtesy have reminded his hearers that the people of India had a right to complain of all attempts to regulate their affairs in accordance with the doctrines of Manchester millowners. He might have dismissed them with a polite assurance that, whenever a fit occasion offered itself, the import duties on cotton should be repealed, but that it rested with the Indian Government to choose the right moment for such a step. Instead of this, he found fault with the new Indian Tariff Act, as contrary not only to free trade principles but to his own instructions, and told his hearers how he had sent out "precise" directions to get rid of the cotton duties by degrees within a fixed period. The pleasure however which this announcement gave them must have been rather damped by his Lordship's reference to the one condition on which the repeal of those duties can be effected. Not even for the benefit of Manchester will Lord Salisbury consent to gain his end either by causing a fiscal deficit, or by imposing a new tax on the people of India. He tells Manchester as he told the Viceroy, "that the paramount importance of maintaining the credit and equilibrium of the finance of the Indian Government must be considered in any such operation. I cannot consent to produce any deficiency of revenue, or consent to the imposition of any new tax, for a purpose for which I believe the growth of the Indian revenue, which especially since the opening of the Suez Canal has been considerable, will be quite sufficient." It is to the natural growth of the Indian revenue that his Lordship justly looks for the means of filling up the void caused by the removal of the obnoxious impost. India will be relieved to hear that no attempt will be made to reimpose the income-tax, which some of Lord Salisbury's interviewers seemed to ask for. That tax, he told them, "has been tried, and has proved a lamentable failure." On this point, at any rate, there need be no cause for anxiety, so far as the present head of the India-office is concerned.

THE LATE MR. HENRI MARTINE.—We regret to record the death yesterday morning, at his residence at Kilpauk, from apoplexy, of Mr. Henri Martine, a partner in the firm of Messrs. Lecot and Co., and Vice-Consul for France. The remains of the deceased gentleman were interred yesterday evening in St. Patrick's Cemetery. The burial service was performed by the Right Rev. Dr. Fennelly, assisted by the Very Rev. J. Colgani and the Rev. Mr. Hennessy. —Madras Times, Jan. 24.

THE INDIAN TARIFF.

The Friend of India remarks that the opinion that contemplated alterations in the tariff are the real reason of Lord Northbrook's abdication seems to be gaining ground in spite of contradiction. That the Secretary of State is bent upon appeasing the wrath of Manchester is apparent; that Sir Louis Mallet has been sent to India to find out how this may best be accomplished, and that no means of accomplishing it without violating the principles of Lord Northbrook's financial policy have been suggested seem also pretty clear. If Lord Northbrook will not listen to the suggestions of the Home Government on this subject, another may, and accordingly the present Viceroy gives place to Lord Lytton. Whatever may be the views of Lord Salisbury on Indian finance there can be little doubt that the new Viceroy comes to India charged to give them effect. It is probable that nothing very definite will be resolved upon till Sir Louis Mallet has communicated to his chief the opinions and conclusions that he may arrive at in India; but had there been any hope that Lord Northbrook would be the willing agent in carrying out the policy finally resolved on his private reasons for retiring at the present conjuncture would doubtless have been overcome. It is ominous that no means can apparently be suggested of getting entirely rid of the import duties except by the reimposition of an income-tax. If the supersession of Lord Northbrook foreruns the resuscitation of the income-tax the lamentations of our native contemporaries may prove to be too well justified. As long as only mere guesses are possible on this subject a feeling of uneasy expectancy must prevail.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

The Pioneer remarks that Sir Richard Temple's latest utterance on the subject shows that he sometimes entertains more moderate and just views of the relations between landlord and tenant than were professed by his occasionally over-energetic predecessor. Theoretically, it seems a hardship that landlords should be at liberty to levy cesses—"aids," "benevolences"—from their tenants, in addition to their regular rents. But what if these cesses were regarded merely as another form of rent; and if, where they were proportionally light, the rent—as it would be understood in the Western sense—was correspondingly high? If we are to trust the numerous minutes issued by Sir Richard Temple on this subject, we must conclude that the evils of cess-levying have been greatly exaggerated. Only in a comparatively few districts have landlords abused the ancient custom. It would seem as if Sir George Campbell's enactment against cesses had induced the shrewder among the peasants—especially in Eastern Bengal—to attack the landlords from opposite points of vantage. They would withhold their customary cesses, and at the same time refuse to pay an enhanced rent. The Lieutenant-Governor does not forget that tenants may behave just as oppressively as the landlords themselves; nor that the latter are fairly entitled to some compensation for the surrender of cesses which have been paid as a matter of course from time immemorial.

WELL-MEANING ENTHUSIASTS.

The Pioneer learns from a prospectus of the National Indian Association that this well-meaning agency has been in existence for five years, and in its own opinion has done its work excellently well; the operations have been carried on steadily and unostentatiously, and it already perceives "a very great change in England in the interest felt in India, and great increase of public attention to social progress among educated Hindus." There is no harm done, or at any rate not much harm, by the innocent indulgence in this fancy on the part of the members of the Association. If it was at all likely that they would succeed in carrying very far that movement which they describe in the rather vaguely worded sentence quoted above—about "a great change in England in the interest felt in India"—we should deplore their activity much more than we do. The disposition to meddle in Indian affairs on the part of English people, which would naturally arise out of an interest in them, would be more injurious to the interests of this country than any one who has not lived here for some time and come to be tolerably acquainted with the systems of Indian Government can possibly understand. It is a misfortune even when a Secretary of State's interest in India rises to that unhealthy level which makes him anxious to carry out his own projects. The Duke of Argyll narrowly missed being a very admirable chief of the India-office, but at rare intervals he went there, read a paper, and passed an order about something, which of course was misconceived. If he had never taken interest in anything but pre-Adamite man, or the remarkable way in which the wings of birds are on the whole adapted for flying, he would have been a first-rate Secretary of State for India. The wish that English people should be interested in India has really arisen from Anglo-Indian vanity. Englishmen who have passed their lives and earned great Indian reputations, perhaps, go back to England, and people say—"Commissioner of Allahabad was he? I suppose a man who's that sort of thing is a gentleman in India as a rule, isn't he; and does Allahabad belong to us?" Then Anglo-Indians are naturally angry, and say—"Why on earth don't people at home take an interest in India?" Forgetting for the moment that Commissioners of Allahabad and elsewhere, and still greater men, would be much impeded in governing the people out here for the best, if that wild aspiration were to be realised. However, some philanthropist out of employ catches up the cry, and starts an association, and grows vaguely impressed with the idea that he is the champion of a down-trodden nationality for which there is no help unless an interest is taken in it. Outside observers meanwhile feel that his arrangements jar upon their sense of fit proportions in human affairs, much as if a boy with a new shilling telescope were to take an interest in lunar physics, and on that ground claim a respectful hearing for his views from the Astronomer Royal.

THE NATIVE ARMY OF INDIA.

The Bombay Gazette allows that Sir Frederick Haines is an eminently conscientious man, but it may be doubted if he has the public spirit to insist in the teeth of Government on a proper and thorough reorganisation of the Native Army. We can comprehend Sir F. Haines refusing the Indian command unless the Native Army was properly organised, for that would be quite within the area of his conscientiousness; but we can hardly fancy him fighting the Government, as Sir Charles Napier might have encountered it, until he gained his point in the way of Army Reform. Sir Frederick Haines is too good a disciplinarian for that, but we rather think that the country wants a man of Sir Charles Napier's stamp more than any one else just now—a man who can force his views upon a sleepy or neglectful Cabinet. Were the old Lion of Sind alive at present, and in office, we should have him speaking out his mind on this great question in a manner which could not be ignored. He would tell the truth—that the unofficered Native Army is as much a paper army as the Army of Great Britain; but this truth is unpalatable to a Government whose claims to public favour are particularly based upon economy in all things. Whether Sir Frederick Haines is the man to insist upon unpalatable truth or not we cannot positively say, but it appears to us that no man with less pugnacity in his disposition than belonged to Sir Charles Napier could effectively wage the battle, in our days, of Military Efficiency versus Public Economy. Sir Frederick Haines, like Lord Napier, is more of a soldier than a statesman, and this will be counted to him as unrighteousness. It is said that he can handle troops in a very masterly manner, and that he is a man who can take a very broad view of affairs. But all this will not make a man an administrator, a creator of armies, or, in a word, an organiser-in-chief, which is the thing wanted just now for the Native Army. Sir F. Haines's experiences of the Native Army have been confined to the Army of Madras, which, we believe, to be very dissimilar from the Native Armies of the other Presidencies, and consequently his partial knowledge only of the business to be accomplished might be of injury to him rather than of good. However, unless Sir Henry Norman is to be considered better, we know of no one more suited to the post of chief organiser than Sir Frederick Haines, for we suppose it to be not a probability, but a certainty, that the Native Army must be reconstructed on the departure of Lord Napier of Magdala. In fact, that Army cannot continue as it is much longer for lack of both officers and men. The public can scarcely credit that this is the case, but so it is. When we hear of the native regiments marching past the Prince at Delhi in "magnificent lines," as described by correspondents who admit their own inability to give an opinion on military matters, we cannot but smile at the credulity of people who swallow "marches past" as guarantees of military efficiency, and who believe in a few Sikh and Ghoorkha crack regiments as the type of the whole Native Army. Send even these Delhi show troops on active service to China, with their three or four officers only to command them, and no reserves to get more from, and we should soon hear a different story from that which circulates at present. But sufficient unto the day, &c., is the motto of Lord Salisbury's Government, and so long as he holds to it our military demands can never receive fair play from any one.

BENGAL CIVIL FUND.—At a late meeting of the Bengal Civil Fund at Calcutta the threatened economy of the Financial Department, in the way of curtailing the privileges hitherto enjoyed as regards interest and exchange, was considered so serious a matter as to demand the preparation of a clear explanatory report for submission to all concerned. We hear this report will be brought before a special general meeting a month hence. The managers of the fund elected for the present year are Messrs. Louis Jackson, C. T. Buckland, Macdonnell, O'Kinealy, and Souttar.—Pioneer.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.—The Government of India has recently posted to the Engineer Establishment of the Public Works Department fifteen of the eighteen passed students of the Rurki College, showing that the Public Works Department has been able to provide vacancies for about sixty young engineer assistants within the last four months. To ensure admission, however, to the full number of new men to be annually expected from Chatham, Cooper's Hill, and the Indian colleges, and to keep up a proper stream of promotion, some complete scheme of pensions and compulsory retirements will sooner or later have to be organised.

THE GREAT BRIDGE OVER THE CHENAB.

The following is a brief description of the Alexandra Bridge, which the Prince of Wales opened on Saturday last:—

The Alexandra Bridge across the Chenab (the ancient Acesines) stands sixty-three miles northward of Lahore and carries the Punjab Northern State Railway on its way to Peshawur.

The line is at present open only to Wazeerabad, on the south bank of the Chenab, and is of the metre gauge, being carried along one side of the Grand Trunk-road, but a new 5ft. 6in. gauge line is being constructed alongside the present temporary one, and the metre gauge line will be opened on that part of the new embankment between Wazeerabad and Jhelum—making the total length open 103 miles—in March next. The line from Jhelum to Peshawur is still under survey, and the whole length from Lahore to the latter (270 miles) will not be opened on the 5ft. 6in. gauge for a year or two to come.

The Alexandra Bridge is remarkable not only for its length (9,300 feet, or more than one mile and three quarters) and cost, more than half a million pounds, but also on account of the extraordinary character of the great river which it crosses. The Chenab is the largest of the five rivers which give their name to the Punjab (the Indus not being included in that number), and rises at a great elevation in Lahoul in the Himalayas. On its course of 760 miles from its source to the junction with the Sutlej near Uch (Ooch) it receives several large tributaries—the principal being the Jhelum and the Ravee—and its drainage area cannot be much less than fifty or sixty thousand square miles. The principal towns on its banks are Kistwar, Wuzeerabad, and Mooltan. It is navigable for very large native vessels for quite one-third of its course, and higher up it is passable for timber rafts.

The width of the river where the railway crosses is three and a-half miles, but this space is only filled with water during the time of floods—April to July—and the road traffic can consequently cross most of the year by the bridge of boats.

The new bridge is of iron girders with brick piers and foundations, and has 64 spans of 142 feet each from the centre to centre of the piers. There are about 6,000 tons of iron-work in the girders, and there are about five million cubic feet of masonry in the piers and abutments, and the foundations. The character of the bed—sand for about 40 or 50 feet in depth, with a shallow underlying stratum of clay—necessitates the use of cylinder or well foundations, and each pier and the face of each of the two abutments stands on three wells each 12 feet 6 inches in diameter, sunk to a minimum depth of 70 feet below low water level. Though, therefore, the bridge, as visible, is low and unimposing, it is really quite 100 feet in height if measured from the well curbs to the tops of the girders. Besides the enormous quantity of work represented by these figures, a vast expense has had to be incurred in keeping the main current of the stream from flanking the bridge, and the protective works which effect this are of the most extensive and ingenious description, stretching many miles up the river. These protective works are quite marvellous as an exhibition of the resources of modern engineering, as the stream might, without them, move aside a mile or more during any high flood, and so cut off the bridge. Not only so, but the waters are trained and forced in such a way that they eat away and carry off the huge islands of sand formed in every direction in the bed of the river by the shifting principal channels.

The works throughout—with the exception of a short interval—have been carried out under the superintendence of Mr. Alexander Grant, M.I.C.E., the engineer-in-chief, a gentleman of varied experience both on the Continent of Europe and in India. The engineer in immediate and executive charge of the works throughout their duration has been Mr. Henry Lumbert, C.E. As both gentlemen have recently been promoted to higher grades in the service it would appear that Government recognises the talent which has carried out departmentally on the Public Works Department system this the greatest bridge ever undertaken in India, and, as before stated, the longest in the world, the Victoria Bridge across the Saint Lawrence in America being only 7,000 feet, while the Chenab is 9,300. Some idea of the length of the bridge may be obtained by remembering that London Bridge is only 693 feet long.

The work was carried out with great rapidity, having been commenced in November, 1871, and finished in December, 1875, or in little more than four years.—Bombay Gazette, Jan. 31.

THE PRINCE OF WALES AT JAMMU.

Jan. 21.—The procession moved down towards the river and passed over the unbridged portion without any accident, and on proceeding up the opposite bank was saluted by lines of extraordinary-looking soldiery. Some of the troops were dressed cap-a pie in mail, and reminded one not a little of the stage warriors that sometimes accompany Richard the Third to battle on the stage of an English theatre. Others wore enormous hats which were not unlike the pincushions that adorned the heads of the eccentric-looking Chiefs at Kandy. Others wore a conical black shiny hat, such as may still be seen worn in the army at Goa. The elephants had some difficulty in surmounting the severe and dangerously steep road that leads to the principal gateway of the city; but they accomplished their task in safety, and the Prince and his staff emerged into the main thoroughfare of Jummu. The streets were lined with troops, some of whom wore tall hats like fools' caps; and the windows and flat roofs of the picturesque dwellings on each side were filled with spectators. Near the gateway, on one roof sat a band of strangely-dressed people, who wore long cloaks and caps, with large flaps which fell over their ears, and were beating rude drums and making shrill pipes scream. These were Llamas, who had been especially brought down from Thibet to swell the triumphal entry of the Prince. A little further on a band of native pipers, dressed partially like Scottish Highlanders, worked drone and chanter in a way which filled the Prince's soul with a strange agony. The music that has power to soothe the breast of the savage was evidently working powerful emotions in H.R.H. and his attendants. Meantime, the great crowd of visitors who had gathered together from Sealkote and Lahor, and almost every distant part of the world, were watching the spectacle from the terrace adjoining the new Palace. The view at this point, when the disappearing sun was shooting behind him a few warm glances to show how much he regretted quitting the scene, was magnificent. Here, beneath the terrace, were other terraces, descending into a large garden divided symmetrically into squares and circles by little walks between the flower-beds. Beyond the gardens lay a portion of the city, towering among the eccentric buil lings of which was the golden dome of the monument erected in memory of the late Maharaja, the man who may be said to have made Cashmere as a kingdom. A little to the left the principal street of the city winds along among a number of strange flat-roofed houses, until it reaches the gate of the city. Still more to the left, but perched on the brow of a green hill which looks down upon the city, is the Bhow Fort, the brown walls of which extend a considerable distance along the steep. Up behind the Fort, a small village hides among the trees. Following with the eye the upward inclination of the city, and turning to the left, we see among trees the white walls of the Jammu College, where boys are taught Sanskrit, Persian, Arabic, English, and Dogra, which last is the language chiefly spoken in Cashmere, and where also a staff of interpreters is kept for the translation of English scientific works into the vernaculars. Then we see the bazaar, within the narrow streets of which the celebrated manufactures and wares of Cashmere are vended, and here and there among the crowded houses rises a temple, the spires of which are tipped with gold. A little beyond, and upon a hill side, stretch the large buildings of the arsenal, where not only military stores are kept, but firearms are manufactured. Beyond the town, and nobly backed by a range of snow-clad mountains, stands the Maharajah's Palace, a congeries of white buildings in various styles, with windows painted brilliant red and green. Turning again to the gardens beneath the Prince of Wales's Palace, and looking to the right in the direction of Sealkote, we see the glittering Tavee, the silver thread of which is tangled among pleasant bits of forest. Jungles extend away to the right far beneath us, and the green and yellow country marks the places which the struggling agriculturist has managed to rescue from the dominion of the bears, the boars, the leopards, and the wolves which are said to infest the forests beneath the hills of Jummu. The scene, with the glancing river in the centre, is not unlike the Thames at Richmond, only, with such accessories of valley and mountain, the Tavee has the better part of the comparison. Behind the new Palace "Alp upon Alp ascends" with snowy crowns. Consider all that I have but feebly attempted to describe lying under the shadows and the rosy Parthian shafts of the setting sun; imagine the sinuous streets that descend gently towards the painted gate of the city filled with a moving mass of colour and life—elephants, soldiers, camels, horses; think, moreover, of the sudden appearance of the gorgeous Royal procession as it turned a bend in the road and swept into view—swept into view, too, at a time when the gardens beneath the Palace, the Forts on the hill sides, and the houses of the city began to appear outlined in softened fire;—and you may have some idea of the rapture of the spectators who were fortunate enough to witness the enchanting scene. That there has been no lovelier sight witnessed in India during the Prince's visit is to pay but a poor compliment to the spectacle—nothing has even approached it.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE MULTAN BRIGADE.—We hear that Colonel Light's reason for declining the command of the vacant Multan Brigade was not, as we understood at first, ill-health, but simply a disinclination to undertake another five years in India.

A CURIOUS COMPLIMENT.—In a burst of gratitude the Government of the Punjab has issued a Gazette Extraordinary thanking all the officers in the commission very nearly "and their respective assistants," besides the officers and men of the Mian Mer and Sealkot garrisons, for the nice way in which they behaved to the Prince of Wales. Every one who was rude at the Delhi Ball may be assumed to have belonged to other provinces.

GENERAL BABAR JUNG.—General Babar Jung Bahadur, lately on the Personal Staff of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, is lying dangerously ill at Delhi. General Babar Jung was attacked with dysentery on the 14th Jan., and has been unable to move since then. He is now (Feb. 5) in the Commander-in-Chief's Camp, and is attended by Dr. Bradshaw, his Excellency's surgeon.

MILITARY.—Colonel C. C. Johnson, Deputy Quarter-Master General, Bengal, proceeds home in March. Major Heathcote, at present with the Perak force, officiates for him. Captain Boyes, 12th Foo, fills the temporary vacancy in the department. Captain R. G. Kennedy and Lieutenant Roberts, 72nd Highlanders, enter the department in the vacancies caused by Majors Collett and Pearson, proceeding on furlough.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN LEVINGE.—News has reached Calcutta of the death, at the Andamans, of a man once well known in the N.W. Provinces, Captain C. H. Levinge, who assisted at the birth and almost at the extinction of the United Bank of India. A year or two back Captain Levinge became a purser in the service of the B. I. S. N. Company, through whose kindness it was he was sent to Port Blair for the change of climate which failed to restore him.

PRESENTS FROM THE PRINCE.—Before the departure of the Prince of Wales from Delhi, his Royal Highness presented Maharaj Kishor Sing, of Jodhpur, one of his Royal Highness's Extra Aides-de-Camp at the Camp of Exercise at Delhi, with a gold chain, a double-barrelled gun, and a copy of the Prince's photograph. Major Hedaya Ali, another of the Prince's Extra Aides-de-Camp, has been directed to meet his Royal Highness at Agra, and it is probable that he will continue on his Personal Staff until the end of the month.

THE "BENGAL GAZETTEER."—As to the progress made by Dr. Hunter in the preparation of the "Bengal Gazetteer," the Englishman says that five volumes of the statistical account of Bengal, containing 2,100 pages of closely-printed type, have been issued from the press, and five more volumes, aggregating nearly 2,000 pages, are nearly completed, two of them being wholly in type, but that there is every prospect of the entire work being finished within the time specified, and that the result of transferring the work of literary compilation and printing to England has been a large saving to the State.

THE LATE MR. E. DUNBAR.—Several friends assembled at the Circular Road Cemetery on Thursday evening to pay their last tribute of respect to the remains of a most worthy Christian man and old resident of Calcutta. Mr. Edward Dunbar, the well-known and respected Secretary of the Military and Medical Funds, which office he had held for a quarter of a century, expired very suddenly on the previous evening, from, we believe, aneurism of the heart. Though he had been complaining for a short time previously of not being in his wonted good health, the symptoms were not of so alarming a nature as to cause grave anxiety to his more immediate friends, and they were, therefore, quite unprepared for so sudden a termination of his life. It was his intention, we understand, to have retired very shortly on his well-earned pension; but it was otherwise ordained, and, like many other Indian officials, he may be said to have died in harness. Many who knew and esteemed him for his kindness of heart will feel his loss both here and in England; but more especially will it be deplored by those in a more humble rank in life, and they were not few, who have benefited for years from his free yet unostentatious charity.—Englishman, Feb. 4.

A LUCKLESS SPECULATOR.—A statement was lately published in a Bombay contemporary, to the effect that on the occasion of the Prince of Wales's State visit to English's Theatre the management cleared the enormous sum of Rs. 14 000. To those who were there, and who witnessed the melancholy array of empty benches, and wandered through the tenantless boxes, this statement of receipts must seem incredible. It is, nevertheless, quite true. The empty boxes and stalls represented no less to the management. It is a fact that no less than 180 stalls were sold at Rs 30 a-piece to an enterprising Baboo, who, hearing that they were likely to fetch at least Rs. 50 a-piece on the night of the entertainment, foresaw a Royal road to fortune for himself and family. Nay, more; the gallant Baboo actually wanted to take the boxes as well at Rs. 1.000 a box; but the management were frightened at the gigantic nature of his speculation and refused to accommodate him. The poor Baboo, it is believed, did sell ten or twelve of his stalls for Rs. 50 each, but on the night of the performance he might have been seen in the compound of the theatre offering to sell for eight annas each, then offering them gratuitously, and occasionally rushing into the theatre to wander at his sweet will over the vast realms of space that claimed him for their master. Later on the buffet did its best to console him, and the luckless speculator was to be observed with admirable chivalry and pluck quaffing bumpers of champagne to the health of his Royal Highness, and inviting others to do the same at his expense. Such a man has our respect no less than our sympathy.—Pioneer.

THE BRAHMA SAMAJ.—The annual meeting in connection with the Brahma Samaj was held at the Town-hall, Calcutta, on Saturday, Jan. 22. Amongst those present were his Honour the Lieutenant-governor, the Bishop of Calcutta, the Rev. Dr. Thoburn, the Rev. J. T. Ross, and several other gentlemen, as well as a few ladies, and a large concourse of natives, Brahmos and others. The proceedings were opened with a Bengali prayer, which was intoned by the leading Brahmos present, after which a hymn was sung. Babu Keshab Chandra Sen then delivered an address, of which the following is a portion, which we cut from the Indian Daily News. He said he verily believed that when Christ was about to leave this world he made over the government of his Church to the Holy Spirit, and Babu Keshab Chandra Sen thought that every believer must see in this arrangement wisdom, sagacity, foresight, and loving kindness. It was necessary that the Prophet of Nazareth should have made such provision for his Church, for the disciples would otherwise have been left in gloom and darkness, in doubt and uncertainty. Even at the present time the heart is perturbed when it looks back upon the gloomy scene, and it was absolutely necessary for the moral and spiritual interests of mankind that Christ should have proclaimed the great fact of the succession of the Holy Spirit, who was to be their Comforter, their Light, their Strength, and their Salvation, and to guide them into all truth. Was the work done when Christ said "It is finished,"—the great and glorious work of human redemption? No. The disciples had strength and comfort sent to them to invigorate them, and to enable them to conquer and go on conquering, imbued with the Spirit of Truth and Holiness. The most orthodox Christian divine need not be ashamed of so true and grand a doctrine as this. Did not the Jewish prophets, even Moses, bear testimony to this? Could revealed law inspire a devotee's heart? Even in the later days, Paul spoke a great deal about the influence and operation of the Spirit; and in the Epistles of Paul we find abundant and continual appeals to the Spirit which kept up the vitality of Christ's Church. The Babu averred that the Theists in India believed in this Spirit of Truth. But they had received the doctrine from the Scriptures of the ancient Hindoo nation, where this Spirit God is described in the strongest and most soul-stirring language, and vindicated as nowhere else He can be vindicated. In India more than in any other country, and in the Hindoo Scripture more than in any other scriptures, the attributes of this spiritual God are enunciated and depicted in beautiful language.

THE MYSOR P.W.D.—We learn that Colonel R. H. Sankey, R.E., Chief Engineer of Mysor, goes home shortly on six months' leave. In that case, Major Chrystie, R.E., will act for him, and Captain Bowen for Major Chrystie.—Bangalor Spectator.

H.M.'s 89TH REGIMENT.—A wing of this regiment left Madras on Jan. 21st for Burma, by the steamer Tenasserim. The remaining wing was to leave Madras in the early part of the next month, when the Tenasserim would return with a wing of H.M.'s 67th Regiment.

INSPECTION OF TROOPS IN THE PRESIDENCY DIVISION.—The Brigadier-General Commanding the centre division has commenced his inspection of the troops serving in it. The 13th Regiment Native Infantry have passed through the ordeal, which will be followed by the others in their turn.

COURT-MARTIAL.—At a General Court-Martial held at Tonghoo in August last, two privates of H.M.'s 67th Regiment, William McGrath and Edward Gorman, were charged with having committed a rape on a Burmese woman. They were also arraigned on some minor charges, and the Court having acquitted them of all the charges, Sir Frederick Haines sent back their finding for revision. In their revised finding the Court adhered to their former finding, and this has now been confirmed by General Elmhirst. The prisoners are accordingly to be released.

THE GOVERNOR OF MALACCA.—His Excellency Captain Shaw, R.N., the Lieutenant-Governor of Malacca, arrived at Madras on Sunday morning, Jan. 30, in the s.s. Devonshire. His Excellency was received by Captain Hankin, R.N., and was conveyed to Government House in one of the carriages of his Grace the Duke of Buckingham, whose guest he will be during his stay in Madras. A salute of fifteen guns was fired from the saluting battery on Monday morning, in honour of his Excellency's arrival.

THE MADRAS STAFF CORPS.—At the close of last year the Madras Staff Corps consisted, we are told, of eight major-generals, twenty-six lieutenant-colonels, who are in receipt of colonels' allowances, with 230 others of the same grade; 149 majors, 168 captains, and thirty-six lieutenants, or in all, 617 officers, of whom, irrespective of the general officers and those in receipt of the colonel's allowances, who number thirty-four between them, 131 officers were on leave to Europe, viz., fifty-four lieutenant-colonels, twenty-five majors, forty-five captains, and seven lieutenants—about twenty-three per cent. of the existing strength of this branch of the service.

THE LOSS OF THE "LOUISA."—The Court of Inquiry into the loss of the Louisa, lost off Cochin, consisting of Mr. D'Silva, the Joint Magistrate, and Mr. Bartlett, the Master Attendant, with Captain Connor, of the Martha Jackson, as assessor, sat at the Court of the Joint Magistrate during the week ending 29th January, to investigate into the circumstances under which the Louisa was wrecked lately on the Tangacherry Reef, near Quilon. The captain, mate, and several of the men have been examined, but the decision of the Court, we learn from the Cochin Argus, is that the Court has recommended the suspension of the captain's certificate for six months.

THE MOHARRAM.—Some apprehensions are entertained that disturbances among the Mohammedans may take place at Chennapatam, about 30 miles from Bangalor, but the Bangalor Spectator states that owing to the advice given to the Sunis of Chennapatam by Mr. Mohamed Khasim Ghum, the proprietor of the Bangalor paper, the Khasimul Akbar, and owing also to the representations made to the local authorities, a troop of the Mysor Horse, with Captain Ludlow, the Assistant Commissioner, and Mr. Abdul Khader, the Assistant Superintendent of Police, have proceeded to Chennapatam, and it is to be hoped that their presence will cause the Moharram to pass off quietly in that turbulent town.

RAILWAY TO THE NILGIRIS.—Mr. Guilford Molesworth, Consulting Engineer for State Railways, who lately left Madras for Burma, has been paying a visit to the Nilgiris, in order to examine the country for a railway up to the hills. He has had lengthened conferences with the Commissioner and District Engineer on the subject, and went over a portion of the route with the latter officer. He is entirely in favour of the Rigi system. The Madras Mail adds to the above information the following remarks:—We trust his visit augurs good things in store for the Nilgiris, and that the much desired Nilgiri Railway will, before many more years, be a fact. We hear that Mr. Juland Danvers, the Secretary of the India-office for Public Works, and Mr. Rendel, the Consulting Engineer for the East India Railway, who visited Ootacamund some time ago, have similarly favourable views of the project.

MEDICAL.—Trustworthy intelligence has reached the Madras Mail that Dr. Paul has declined unconditionally the Deputy Surgeon Generalship, Madras, which was offered to him by telegraph, and although he has not definitely severed his connection with this country, the likelihood of his return is extremely problematical. For the sake of the service and of the community, adds the Mail who had great confidence in his skill and kindness, this is to be much regretted. Dr. Paul being himself a practical medical man of ripe experience would have made an admirable Deputy Surgeon General, and, even better, head of the service. Under his rule the present most irritating system of meddling in every petty detail and the writing of endless memos would most probably have received a check. Dr. Oswald will probably now obtain the Deputy Surgeon Generalship.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR.—His Excellency Sir Philip Wodehouse and suite will leave Sattara on Wednesday for Mahableshwur, and will leave Mahableshwur for Gunesh Khind, Government House, on the following morning, and after remaining at Gunesh Khind for two days, his Excellency will leave for Sholapore on the 7th instant, and from thence his Excellency will proceed to Bijapoor.—Poona Observer.

STRIKE OF WORKMEN OF THE G. I. P. RAILWAY.—About three hundred of the workmen of the G. I. P. Railway Company have been on strike, or rather have been "locked out" for the last two or three days, in consequence of their refusing to agree to the terms of the Company for payment of piecework. A considerable number of them were assembled yesterday on the piece of ground at Byculla, between the Jewish Synagogue and the Byculla schools, enjoying the dolce far niente and the eloquence of orators who were haranguing them in groups. It is probable that the matter will be arranged by the introduction into the workshops of a large number of the "heathen Chinee."

THE S. S. "COROMANDEL."—The inquiries set afoot by the Government respecting the s. s. Coromandel have resulted in nothing whatever being learned about the missing vessel. The Kwangtung and other ships made a close search for her, but were unable to ascertain anything respecting her whereabouts or her fate. The Resident at Aden on the 21st of December sent the following final report:—"I have the honour to report that some of the Mijjeetain chiefs and their followers from the vicinity of Ras Hafoon, arrived at Aden a few days ago on their way to Mecca, and on being questioned they were unable to give any information regarding the s. s. Coromandel. I think there can be little doubt that this unfortunate vessel foundered at sea."

MR SCOBLE.—On Thursday there was a meeting of the Bombay Bar, at which it was decided that some mark of respect should be shown to the Hon. Mr. Scoble, Advocate-General, before his departure to England. On the motion of Mr. Marriott, seconded by Mr. Mayhew, and supported by Mr. Browning and Mr. Purcell, it was unanimously agreed that a dinner should be given to the honourable and learned gentleman on the eve of his departure for England, which takes place on the 26th instant. It is expected that the dinner will take place at Mr. Marriott's house, and that it will be strictly confined to practising barristers. A committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements.—Times of India, Feb. 4.

A KARACHI "WEBB."—Karachi harbour is wide enough to make a swim across it a great feat of strength and endurance. The Sindian relates how the son of Mr. Price, the Karachi Harbour Superintendent, successfully swam across the harbour on the morning of January 26th. Mr. Price had a competitor in Mr. Wray. The account states that Mr. Price and Mr. Wray both took headers at the starting for the other side at 8.5 A.M.; they at first complained much of cold, but kept perseveringly on. Mr. Wray, when less than a quarter distance to go, gave up, he felt so intensely cold; this, as is known, is a forerunner of cramp. Not so with Mr. Price; he strove on, and manfully made the opposite shore. The current was strong—a proof of which was that he landed about 2,000 feet to the north of where he started.

AN EXCHANGE OF TERRITORY.—A correspondent of the Bombay Gazette says it is generally understood that for political convenience, Babariawad, a Mohammedan State, enjoying second-class jurisdiction in the south of Kattywar, will be transferred from the present Chief to the British, and that country of equal area, and perhaps yielding equal revenue, will be given him in exchange, near Junjeera—for the ruler of Junjeera and of Babariawad is the same. This will be a fair exchange. Whether the Hubshee has consented to this arrangement or not has not yet transpired. The State is very fertile; its capital town, Jafferabad, is the largest seaport in the Peninsula of Kattywar. The State was originally founded some centuries ago by the great Seedhee of Junjeera, who was a distinguished naval officer of the Moguls. The Hubshee of Jafferabad and Junjeera pays no tribute to anybody.

KOLAPUR.—In the course of his address to the Kolapur Rajah and other chiefs assembled in Darbar at Kolapur on Jan. 22, Sir Philip Wodehouse said:—There is, perhaps, nothing more remarkable in the present political condition of Western India than the number of native States, of which the hereditary rulers are minors, and of which consequently the affairs have been and are still materially controlled by the British Government. Here in the south such is the case with Kolhapore, Sawant Wareee, Meeruj, and Mudhol. That it is so in Kolhapore at the present moment is the result of the premature death of the late Rajah, whose life was long enough to secure for him general esteem, and whose death was the cause of sincere regret not alone to his own subjects, but to the Government of this country, and to those who during his visit to England had had opportunities of estimating his high qualities. The minority in Meeruj is also the result of the very unexpected death of the late chief. Of his qualifications for high position I can myself speak from personal observation during his attendance as a member of my Council for making Laws and Regulations at the seat of Government. He was ever distinguished by his courteous bearing and his patient and intelligent attention to the business of the Council, and I cannot but feel that in his death the people of his State have sustained the loss of one who, had his life been prolonged, would have made the promotion of their welfare his chief aim. Turning to the north we find as minors the Gaikwar of Baroda, the Maharaja of Edur, the chiefs of Barria, Loonawara, Bhownuggur, Limree, Morvee, Wudwan, and Gondul, to whom must now be added the son of H.H. the Rao of Kutch, the late active and intelligent ruler of that State, who has been so recently cut off by death. The responsibility which thus devolves on the British Government is very great. It has given the plainest intimation of its desire for the prolongation of native rule in all these States by the unreserved concession of the right of adoption, whenever that becomes necessary by the failure of natural heirs. It becomes, therefore, its obvious duty to spare no pains in providing for these young chiefs such means of education as will best fit them for the discharge of their high duties. In Kattywar a college has been established by the liberality of the chiefs which is gradually gaining their confidence, and promises to be productive of great benefits. In this State for the purposes of education it has been the object of the Government to associate the Rajah with a few other youths of high birth. It is by such association that the Government hopes to encourage a spirit of emulation, to lay the foundation of lasting friendships, and to impress upon the chiefs that the happiness and advancement of their subjects must ever constitute their chief claim to honour and respect. It will be fortunate for this State and its neighbours if through the liberal support of the leading men similar advantages can be placed within the reach of the youths of the Jagheerdars of the Southern Mahratta country.

HIS Excellency Sir William Gregory left Madras on the evening of the 21st January for Tuticorin and Ceylon.

WE hear that the whole edition of Dr. Moore's "Manual of Family Medicine for India" has been sold, and that Government has commissioned the author to prepare another.
